SONNET.

A LONELY Man he was, from whom these lays Flow'd in his cloister'd musings : He in scorn
Held them, the unfeeling multitude, who born
For deeds of nobler purpose, their ripe days
Waste amidst fraudulent industry, to raise Inglorious wealth.—But He, life's studious morn
Gave to the Muse, so best might he adorn
His thoughtful brow, with never-dying bays.
And well the Muse repay'd him. She hath given
An unsubstantial world of richer fee ;
High thoughts, unchanging visions, that the leaven
Of earth partake not ;—Rich then must he be,
Who of this cloudless world, this mortal heaven,
Possesseth in his right the Sovereignty.

THE LIFE OF THOMAS GRAY.

BY JOHN MITFORD.

THOMAS GRAY, the subject of the present narrative, was the fifth child of Mr. Philip Gray, a respectable citizen and money-scrivener in London. His grandfather was also a considerable merchant in that place. The maiden name of his mother was Dorothy Antrobus. Thomas was born in Cornhill, the 26th of December, 1716; and was the only one of twelve children who survived. The rest died in their infancy, from suffocation, produced by a fullness of blood; and he owed his life to a memorable instance of the love and courage of his mother, who removed the paroxysm, which attacked him, by opening a vein with her own hand: an instance of affection that seems to have been most tenderly preserved by him through his after life, repaid with care and attention, and remembered when the object of his filial solitudes could no longer claim them. Mason informs us, "that Gray seldom mentioned his mother without a sigh."

He was educated at Eton, under the protection of Mr. Antrobus, his maternal uncle, who was at that time assistant to Dr. George, and also a fellow of Pembroke College, at Cambridge, where Gray was admitted as a pensioner in 1734, in his nineteenth year. I should be unwilling to pass over this period of his life, without mentioning that while at Eton, as well as at Cambridge, he depended for his entire support on the affection and firmness of his mother; who, when his father had refused all assistance, cheerfully maintained him on the scanty produce of her separate industry. At Eton his friendship with Horace Walpole, and more particularly with Richard West,* commenced. In him he met with one, who, from the goodness of his heart, the sincerity of his friendship, and the excellent cultivation of his mind, was worthy of his warmest attachment. The purity of taste, indeed, as well as the proficiency in literature which the letters of West display, were remarkable at his age; and his studious and pensive habits of mind, his uncertain health, and his early and untimely death have all contributed to throw "a melancholy grace" over the short and interesting narrative of his life. With him, for the period of eight years, Gray enjoyed what the moralist calls "the most virtuous as well as the happiest of all attachments—the wise security of friendship: 'Par studiis, ævique modis.'" Latterly, when West's health was declining, and his prospects in life seemed clouded and uncertain, Gray's friendship was affectionate and anxious, and only terminated by the early death of his friend in his twenty-sixth year.

* Richard West was the son of the right honourable Richard West, lord chancellor of Ireland; who died in 1727 or 1728, aged 36; and his grandfather, by the mother's side, was Bishop Burnet. His father was the maternal uncle of Glover the poet, and is supposed to be the author of a tragedy called 'Hecuba,' published in 1726. Mason says that, when at school, West's genius was thought to be more brilliant than his friend's. A portrait of the father is in the hall of the Inner Temple, given by Richard Glover. He was appointed Lord Chancellor in the reign of George the First, in 1725. He wrote on Treasons and Bills of Attainder, also on the Manner of Creating Peers. See this last tract highly praised in Quarterly Review, No. lxxxiv. p. 303. See King's poem, The Toast, p. 117.

When Gray removed to Peter House, Horace Walpole* went to King's College in the same university, and West to Christ Church at Oxford. From this period the life of Gray is conducted by his friend and biographer Mr. Mason, through the medium of his Letters;* concerning which it may be said, that from the humour, the elegance, and the classical taste displayed in them; from the alternate mixture of serious argument, animated description, just criticism, and playful expression; notwithstanding the incidents of his life were peculiarly few in number, nor any of them remarkable, yet a more interesting publication of the kind never appeared in English literature.

* In H. Walpole's Works are some letters between West and Walpole at College (vol. iv. p. 411). The intimacy between Gray, Walpole, West, and Asheton, was called the quadruple alliance; and they passed by the names of Tydeus, Orosmales, Almanzor, and Plato. Thomas Asheton was afterwards fellow of Eton College, rector of St. Botolph, Bishopsgate Street, and preacher to the Society of Lincoln's Inn. He wrote an answer to a work of Dr. Conyers Middleton. Walpole addressed a poetical epistle from Florence to him. See Gray's Letters; and Walpole's Works, vol. v. p. 386. Asheton died in 1775. His niece of the same name married Dr. William Cleaver, Bishop of St. Asaph. See an account of him in Sir Egerton Brydges's Restituta, vol. iv. p. 249.

Gray's Letters commence, as I have said, from the time when he left Eton for Cambridge; but from them it is difficult to trace the line of study which he pursued at College. His letters treat chiefly of his poetry, and other private pursuits; and he seems to have withdrawn himself entirely from the severity of mathematical studies, and to have confined his inquiries to classical literature, to the acquisition of modern languages, to history, and other branches of what is called polite learning. West describes himself and his friend as walking hand in hand, “ Through many a flow'ry path and shelly grot,

Where Learning lull'd us in her private maze.”

During Gray's residence at College, from 1734 to September, 1738, his poetical productions were — ‘ A Copy of Latin Verses,’ inserted in the ‘ Musæ

Etonenses ;' another ' On the Marriage of the Prince of Wales ;' and ' A Sapphic Ode to West.' A small part of his ' Translation from Statius,' Mr. Mason has given ; but has withheld a Latin Version of the ' Care Selve beate' of the Pastor Fido, and an English Translation of part of the fourteenth canto of Tasso's ' Gerusalemme Liberata,' which is inserted in the present edition. From September till the following March, Gray resided at his father's house : but his correspondence with West, who was then with his mother at Epsom, his biographer has thought it unnecessary to insert.

At the request of Horace Walpole, Gray accompanied him in his travels through France and Italy, and deferred his intended study of the law. From letters to his friend West, and to his own family, we have an account of his pursuits while abroad. He seems to have been, as we might have expected, a very studious and diligent traveller. His attention was directed to all the works of art that were curious and instructive. Architecture both of Gothic and Grecian origin, painting, and music, were all studied by him. He appears to have applied diligently to the language ; nor did the manners and customs of the inhabitants escape his attention. Like Addison, he compared with the descriptions of ancient authors the modern appearance of the countries through which he passed. There are, indeed, few gratifications more exquisite than those which we experience in being able to identify the scenes, and realize the descriptions, which have been long consecrated in the mind by genius and by virtue ; which have supplied the fancy with its earliest images, and are connected in the memory with its most lasting associations. In such moments as these, we appear to be able suddenly to arrest the progress and lessen the devastations of time. We hardly contemplate with regret the ages that have passed in silence and oblivion ; and we behold, for the first time, the fading and faint descriptions of language, stamped with the fresh impressions of reality and truth. The letters which Gray wrote from Italy were not intended for publication, and do not contain a regular account of the observations which he made : but are rather detached and entertaining descriptions, intended for the amusement of his friends at home. Every thing which he thought of importance was committed to his journal. “He catalogued,” says Mr. Mason, “and made occasional short remarks on the pictures which he saw. He wrote a minute description of every thing which he saw in his tour from Rome to Naples ; as also of the environs of Rome, Florence, &c. They abound with many uncommon remarks, and pertinent classical quotations.”

The route chosen by the travellers was one usually taken :—from Paris, through Rheims (where they stayed three months, principally to accustom themselves to the French language) to Lyons, whence they took a short excursion to Geneva, over the mountains of Savoy; and by Turin, Genoa, and Bologna to Florence. There they passed the winter in the company of Mr. Horace Mann, the envoy at that court.* In March, 1740, Clement the Twelfth, then Pope, died; and they hastened their journey to Rome, in the hope of seeing the installation of his successor.† That Gray would have wished to have extended his travels, and enlarged his prospect beyond these narrow limits, if he had possessed the power, we know from his subsequent advice to a friend who was commencing his travels: “Tritum viatorum compitum calca, et, cum poteris, desere.” And the following passage sketches the outline of an Italian tour, which, I believe, few of our travellers have ever completed: “I conclude, when the winter is over, and you have seen Rome and Naples, you will strike out of the beaten path of English travellers, and see a little of the country. Throw yourselves into the bosom of the Apennine; survey the horrid lake of Amsanctus; catch the breezes on the coast of Taranto and Salerno; expatiate to the very toe of the continent; perhaps strike over the faro of Messina; and having measured the gigantic columns of Girgenti and the tremendous cavern of Syracuse, refresh yourselves amidst the fragrant vale of Enna.—Oh! che bel riposo!"

In May, after a visit to the Frascati and the Cascades of Tivoli, Gray sent his beautiful 'Alcaic Ode' to West. In June he made a short excursion to Naples; and was charmed with the scenery that presented itself in that most delightful climate. He describes the large old fig-trees, the oranges in bloom, the myrtles in every hedge, and the vines hanging in festoons from tree to tree. He must have been among the first English travellers who visited the remains of Herculaneum,* as it was discovered only the preceding year; and he pointed out to his companion, the description in Statius that pictured the latent city:

“ Hæc ego Chalcidicis ad te, Marcelle, sonabam Litoribus, fractas ubi Vesbius egerit iras,

* Some excavations were made in Herculaneum in 1709 by the Prince D'Elbeuf: but thirty years elapsed after the orders given to the Prince to dig no farther, before any more notice was taken of them. In December, 1738, the King of the two Sicilies was at Portici, and gave orders for a prosecution of the subterraneous labours. There was an excavation in the time of the Romans; and another in 1689. In a letter from H. Walpole to West on this subject (see Walpole's Works, vol. iv. p. 448), dated Naples, June 14, 1740, is a passage which shows Mr. Mason's conjecture, that the travellers did not recognise the ancient town of Herculaneum by name, to be unfounded. H. Walpole calls it by that name in his letter.

Æmula Trinacriis volvens incendia flammis.
 Mira fides ! credetne virum ventura propago,
 Cum segetes iterum, cum jam hæc deserta virebunt,
 Infra urbes, populosque premi ?”

Statii Sylv. IV. iv. 78.*

At Naples the travellers stayed ten days ; and Gray’s next letter to his father, in which he talks of his return to England, is dated again from Florence ; and whence he sent, soon after, his Poem on the ‘ Gaurus’ to West. He remained, however, at that place about eleven months ; and during this time commenced his Latin poem ‘ De Principiis Cogitandi.’ He then set off with Walpole, on the 24th of April, for Bologna and Reggio,† at the latter of which towns an unfortunate difference took place between them, and they parted. The exact cause of this quarrel has been passed over by the delicacy of his biographer, because H. Walpole was alive when the Memoirs of Gray were written. The former, however, charged himself with the chief blame ; and lamented that he had not paid more attention and deference to Gray’s superior judgment and prudence. In the 'Walpoliana' (vol. i. p. 95, art. cx.) is the following passage: "The quarrel between Gray and me arose from his being too serious a companion. I had just broke loose from the restraint of the University, with as much money as I could spend; and I was willing to indulge myself. Gray was for antiquities, &c.; whilst I was for perpetual balls and plays;—the fault was mine." Perhaps the freedom of friendship spoke too openly to please: for in a letter from Walpole to Mr. Bentley, some years afterwards, he says: "I was accustomed to flattery enough when my father was minister: at his fall I lost it all at once: and since that I have lived with Mr. Chute, who is all vehemence; with Mr. Fox, who is all disputation; with Sir C. Williams, who has no time from flattery, himself; and with Gray, who does not hate to find fault with me."* Whatever was the cause of this quarrel, it must have been very serious, if the information is correct which is given in the manuscript of the Rev. W. Cole, a person who appears to have lived in terms of intimacy with * See Walpole's Works, vol. v. p. 334. In a letter from Gray to Walpole in 1751, is a sentence which seems to point towards this quarrel: "It is a tenet with me, (he says)—a simple one, you will perhaps say,—that if ever two people who love one another come to breaking, it is for want of a timely eclaircissement, a full and precise one, without witnesses or mediators, and without reserving one disagreeable circumstance for the mind to brood upon in silence." See Walpole's Works, vol. v. p. 389.

† Dr. Johnson has two slight mistakes in his ‘ Life of Gray.’ He says that they quarrelled at Florence and parted, instead of Reggio. He says also, that Gray began his poem ‘ De Principiis Cogitandi’ after his return : but it was commenced in the winter of 1740, at Florence.

Gray during the latter part of his life. “ When matters (he says) were made up between Gray and Walpole, and the latter asked Gray to Strawberry Hill, when he came, he without any ceremony told Walpole, that he came to wait on him as civility required, but by no means would he ever be there on the terms of his former friendship, which he had totally cancelled.” Such is the account given by Mr. Cole, and which I suppose is worthy of credit: at any rate, it does not seem at all inconsistent with the independence and manly freedom which always accompanied the actions and opinions of Gray.*

Having thus lost his companion, and, with the separation of friendship, all inducement to remain abroad, Gray went immediately to Venice, and returned through Padua and Milan, following almost the same road through France, which he had travelled before. If he sent any letters to West on his return,† it was not thought requisite to publish them: those to his father were only accounts of his health and safety. Though he returned to England

* For a further elucidation of this subject, the reader is referred to the second volume of this Work, p. 174-5, where I have stated what are the supposed causes of the quarrel; and the terms of the reconciliation will be best learned, from the expressions which Gray uses in his letter to Mr. Wharton on this subject.

† Some letters from Walpole to West, while the former was on his travels with Gray, are in Walpole's Works, vol. iv. p. 419—463. There is one letter from Reggio, May 10th, but not mentioning any quarrel, nor even Gray by name.

as speedily and directly as he could, yet he once diverged from his way, between Turin and Lyons, again to contemplate the wild and magnificent scenery that surrounded the Grande Chartreuse; and in the Album of the Fathers he wrote his beautiful ‘Alcaic Ode,’ which bears strong marks of proceeding from a mind deeply impressed with the solemnity of the situation; where “every precipice and cliff was pregnant with religion and poetry.”*

In two months after the return of Gray in 1741, his father died, † his constitution being worn out by repeated attacks of the gout; and Gray’s filial duty was now solely directed to his mother. To the friend who condoled with Pope on his father’s death, he answered in the pious language of Euryalus,—“Genitrix est mihi,”—and Gray, in the like circumstances, assuredly felt no less the pleasure that arose from contributing to preserve the life and happiness of a parent. With a small fortune, which her husband’s imprudence had materially impaired, ‡ Mrs. Gray and a maiden sister retired to the house of Mrs. Rogers,* another sister, at Stoke, near Windsor: and Gray, thinking his fortune not sufficient to enable him to prosecute the study of the law, and yet unwilling to hurt the feelings of his mother, by appearing entirely to forsake his profession, changed or pretended to change the line of study, and went to Cambridge to take his degree in civil law. That in his own mind, however, he had entirely given up all thoughts of his profession, seems to appear from a letter to West: "Alas, for one (he says) who has nothing to do but to amuse himself! I believe my amusements are as little amusing as most folks; but no matter, it makes the hours pass, and is better than ἐν ἀμάθιᾳ καὶ ἀμούσιᾳ καταβιῶναι."

"But the narrowness of his circumstances," says Mr. Mason, "was not the only thing that distressed him at this period. He had, as we have seen, lost the friendship of Mr. Walpole abroad. He had also lost much time in his travels; a loss which application could not easily retrieve, when so severe and laborious a study as that of the Common Law was to be the object of it; and he well knew that whatever improvement he might have made in this interval, either in taste or science, such improvement would stand him in little stead with regard to his present situation and exigencies. This was not all : his other friend, Mr. West, he found on his return oppressed by sickness and a load of family misfortunes. These the sympathizing heart of Mr. Gray made his own. He did all in his power (for he was now with him in London) to soothe the sorrows of his friend, and try to alleviate them by every office of the purest and most perfect affection : but his cares were vain. The distresses of Mr. West's mind had already too far affected a body from the first weak and delicate."

* Mason describes Mrs. Rogers as the widow of a clergyman, but Isaac Reed, in a MS. note, has said that he was a gentleman of the law.

West was indeed at this time rapidly declining in health, and had gone into Hertfordshire for the benefit of the air. To him Gray sent part of his Tragedy of ' Agrippina,' then commenced ; and which, Mr. Mason thinks, was suggested by a favourable impression left on his mind from a representation of the Britannicus of Racine. His friend objected to the length of Agrippina's speech ; and the Fragment is now published, not exactly as Gray left it, but altered by Mr. Mason from the suggestions of West. The plan of this play seems to have been drawn after the model of the plays of Racine ; though it displays perhaps more spirit and genius than ever informed the works of that elegant and correct tragedian. Mr. Mason, in a letter to Dr. Beattie, mentions among the Poetry left by Gray, " the opening scene of a tragedy called Agrippina, with the first speech of the second, written much in Racine's manner, and with many masterly strokes."* The language resembles rather that of Rowe or Addison, than of Shakespeare; though it is more highly wrought, and more closely compacted. If finished, it would, I think, have delighted the scholar in the closet; but it is too descriptive to have pleased upon the stage. Βαστάζονται δὲ οἱ ἀναγνωστικοί . . . . . Καὶ παραβαλλόμενοι, οἱ μὲν τῶν γραφικῶν, ἐν τοῖς ἀγῶσι στενοὶ φαίνονται.†

Gray now employed himself in the perusal of the ancient authors. He mentions that he was reading Thucydides, Theocritus, and Anacreon. He translated some parts of Propertius with great elegance of language and versification, and selected for his Italian studies the poetry of Petrarch. He wrote an Heroic Epistle in Latin, in imitation of the manner of Ovid; and a Greek Epigram, which he communicated to West: to whom also in the summer, when he retired to his family at Stoke, he sent his 'Ode to Spring,' which was written there, but which did not arrive in Hertfordshire till after the death of his beloved friend.* West died only twenty days after he had written the Letter to Gray, which concludes with "Vale, et vive paulisper cum vivis." So little (says Mr. Mason) was the amiable youth then aware of the short time that he himself would be numbered amongst the living.

* I have said that Gray kept an attentive eye upon Racine during the composition of his tragedy; an assertion, I think, that the notes will serve to prove: but the learned Mr. Twining, in his notes on Aristotle's Poetics, (p. 385, 4to.) says: "I have often wondered what it was that could attach Mr. Gray so strongly to a poet whose genius was so little analogous to his own. I must confess I cannot, even in the Dramatic Fragment given us by Mr. Mason, discover any other resemblance to Racine, than in the length of the speeches. The fault, indeed, is Racine's; its beauties are surely of a higher order," &c.

I shall here insert a very correct and judicious criticism, on a censure made by Johnson of an expression in Gray's Ode to Spring, by the late * West was buried in the chancel of Hatfield church, beneath a stone, with the following epitaph: "Here lieth the body of Richard West, esq. only son of the right honourable Richard West, esq. lord chancellor of Ireland, who died the 1st of June, 1742, in the 26th year of his age." West's poems have never been fully collected. There is one, 'An Ode to Mary Magdalene,' in Walpole's Works, vol. iv. p. 419: another in Dalrymple's Songs, p. 142. In the European Magazine for January, 1798, p. 45, is a poem said to be written by him, called 'Damon to Philomel;' and a Copy of Verses on his Death, supposed to be written by his uncle, Judge Burnet. In Walpole's Works, vol. i. p. 204, is a well known epigram which was written by West, 'Time and Thomas Hearne,' which was printed by Mr. Walpole in a paper intended for the 'World,' but not sent, and which is commonly attributed to Swift. It appears also, that part of the tragedy of Pausanias is extant in MS. See the editor's note in Walpole's Works, vol. iv. p. 458; also his translation of Tibullus. See Mason's Gray, vol. i. p. 22. The collection of his poems by Dr. Anderson, in the edition of the British Poets, is very incomplete: and Mr. Alexander Chalmers, in his subsequent edition, has omitted them entirely.

Lord Grenville, a criticism which does credit to his Lordship's learning and taste.*

“ ‘There has of late arisen,’ says Johnson, in his Life of Gray, ‘a practice of giving to adjectives derived from substantives, the termination of participles: such as the cultured plain, the daisied bank; but I was sorry to see in the lines of a scholar like Gray, the honied spring.’

“ A scholar, like Johnson, might have remembered that mellitus is used by Catullus, Cicero, and Horace, and that honied itself is found both in Shakspeare and in Milton. But to say nothing of the general principles of all language, how could the writer of an English Dictionary be ignorant that the ready conversion of our substantives into verbs, participles, and participial adjectives, is of the very essence of our own tongue, derived to it from its Saxon origin, and a main source of its energy and richness?

“ 1st. in the instances of verbs and participles, this is too obvious to be dwelt upon for a moment. Such verbs as to plough, to witness, to pity, to ornament, together with the participles regularly formed from them are among the commonest words in our language. Shakspeare, in a ludicrous but expressive phrase, has converted even a proper name into a participle of this description: ‘Petruchio,’ he says, ‘is kated.’—The epithet of a

hectoring fellow is a more familiar instance of a participle similarly formed, though strangely distorted in its use to express a meaning almost the opposite of its original.

“ 2ndly. These participles of verbs thus derived, like all other participles, when used to denote habitual attributes, pass into adjectives. Winged, feathered, thatched, painted, and innumerable others are indiscriminately used in both these forms, according to the construction of the sentence, and its context. And the transition is so easy, that in many passages it may be doubted to which of these two parts of speech such words should properly be referred.

“ 3rdly. Between these participial adjectives, and those which Johnson condemns, there is the closest analogy. Both are derived from substantives; and both have the termination of participles. The latter, such words for instance, as honied, daisied, tapestried, slippered, and the like, differ from the others only in not being referable to any yet established verb; but so little material is the difference, that there is hardly one of these cases, in which the corresponding verb might not, if it were wanted, be formed and used, in strict conformity with the genius of our language. Sugard is an epithet frequent in our ancient poetry, and its use was properly long anterior to that of the verb, of which it now appears to be a participle. But that verb has since been fully adopted into our language. We now sugar our cups, as freely as our ancestors spiced and drugged them, and no reason can be assigned, why, if such were our practice, we might not also honey them, with equal propriety of speech.

“4thly. On the same analogy we form another very numerous and very valuable class of adjectives, compound epithets, derived like the others, from substantives, and like them terminating as participles, but having prefixed to them the signification of some additional attribute. Such are in common speech, four-footed, open-hearted, short-sighted, good-natured, and the like. In poetry we trace them from the well-envyned franklin of Chaucer, through the most brilliant pages of all his successors to the present hour. What reader of Shakspeare or Milton needs to be reminded of even-handed, high-flighted, and trumpet-tongued, or of full-voiced, flowery-kirtled, and fiery-wheeled? All these expressive and beautiful combinations, Johnson’s canon would banish from our language.

“His criticism therefore recoils on himself. The poet has followed the usage of his native tongue, and the example of its best masters. The grammarian appears unacquainted both with its practice and its principles. The censure serves only to betray the evil passions, which in a very powerful and well-intentioned, but very ill-regulated mind, the success of a contemporary had been permitted to excite.

follows, where Johnson attempts to ridicule a passage which few other men have read without delight, Gray's beautiful invocation of the Thames, in the Ode on Eton College—' Say, Father Thames,' &c. ' This is useless,' he says, ' and puerile.' Father Thames had no better means of ' knowing than himself.' He forgets his own address to the Nile in Rasselas, for a purpose so very similar; and he expects his readers to forget one of the most affecting passages in Virgil. Father Thames might well know as much of the sports of boys as the ' great Father of Waters ' knew of the discontents of men, or the Tiber himself of the obsequies of Marcellus."

In the autumn of 1742, Gray composed the ode on ' A distant Prospect of Eton College,' and the ' Hymn to Adversity.' The ' Elegy in a Country Church-yard' was commenced. An affectionate Sonnet in English, and an Apostrophe which opens the fourth book of his poem ' De Principiis Cogitandi,' (his last composition in Latin verse,) bear strong marks of the sorrow left on his mind from the death of West; and of the real affection with which he honoured the memory of his worth, and of his talents.

Mr. Mason thinks that Gray did not finish this poem, on account of the unfavourable reception, or rather neglect, of the Anti-Lucretius * of the Cardinal Melchior de Polignac; a poem which had been long expected, and appeared about that time. The failure, however, of M. de Polignac's poem may be attributed partly to its length, (for it contains above thirteen thousand verses,) and to a want of sufficient variety and digression in the composition. The versification is not always finished and compact, and the language has lost much of its elegance in the endeavour to accommodate it with precision to the subject.

Gray's residence at Cambridge was now continued, not from any partiality to the place where he received his education, but partly from the scantiness of his income, and in a great measure, no doubt, for the convenience which its libraries afforded.* Original composition he almost entirely long employed on it, and recited it so often, that many parts were stolen, and inserted in the works of other authors. Le Clerc got a fragment by heart, and published it in one of his literary journals. The cardinal died while his work was unfinished, and before he could add two more books to it against the Deists. See Anecdotes par Grimm, vol. i. p. 455. The line written under Franklin's picture, "Eripuit cœlo fulmen, sceptrumque tyrannis"—is an imitation of one in the Anti-Lucretius, "Eripuitque Jovi fulmen, Phœboque sagittas."

* In a note to the Spital Sermon, p. 117, Dr. Parr says: "After the opportunities which Mr. Gray enjoyed, and of which he doubtless had availed himself, for observing the state of literature and the characters of literary men upon the Continent, he did not merely visit the University, but fixed his chief residence there. And of a choice to which he adhered so steadily and so long, the scantiness of his for-neglected; but his time was so assiduously occupied in a regular and studious perusal of the best Greek authors, that in six years he had read all the writers of eminence in that language, digesting and arranging their contents, remarking their peculiarities, and noting their corrupt and difficult passages with great accuracy and diligence. In the winter of 1742, he was admitted a bachelor of civil law; and a short recreation of his studies appears in a 'Fragment of an Address to Ignorance,' which contains a satire on the University where he resided,* whose system of education he always disliked and ridiculed, and against which he used to tune, the love of books, and the easy access he had to them in many libraries, will hardly be considered as the sole motives." Dr. Parr, however, does not assign any other motives that influenced Gray, in his choice of the University for a residence.

* In p. 117 of the Spital Sermon, Dr. Parr says: "At that very time in which Mr. Gray spoke so contemptuously of Cambridge, that very University abounded in men of erudition and science, with whom the first scholars would not have disdained to converse: and who shall convict me of exaggeration, when I bring forward the names of Bentley, Davies, Asheton—of Jesus: Provost Snape, Middleton, Tunstall the public orator, Baker—of St. John's: Edmund Law, John Taylor, Thomas Johnson, Waterland, Whaley (afterwards regius professor of divinity), Smith (the nephew of Cotes), afterwards master of Trinity, Roger Long, Colson, the correspondent of Sir Isaac Newton, and Professor Saunderson?"

speak so openly, as to create many enemies. It is plain, from his Letters, that he thought the attention and time bestowed there on mathematical and metaphysical pursuits, would have been more profitably spent in classical studies. There is some resemblance in the style of this Fragment to part of Pope's Dunciad; the fourth book of which had appeared but a year or two before: and Gray, I should think, had that poem in his mind, when he wrote these lines, to ridicule what he calls "that ineffable Octogrammaton, the power of laziness."

In 1744 the difference between Walpole and Gray was adjusted by the interference of a lady who wished well to both parties. The lapse of three years had probably been sufficient, in some degree, to soften down, though not entirely obliterate, the remembrance of supposed injuries on either side; natural kindness of temper had reassumed its place, and we find their correspondence again proceeding on friendly and familiar terms. About this time Gray became acquainted with Mr. Mason, then a scholar of St. John's College, whose poetical talents he had noticed; and some of whose poems he revised at the request of a friend. He maintained a correspondence with his intimate and respectable friend, Dr. Wharton, of Durham; and he seems to have lived on terms of familiarity with the celebrated Dr. Middleton,* whose loss he afterwards laments. "I find a friend (he says) so uncommon thing, that I cannot help regretting even an old acquaintance, which is an indifferent likeness of it."

In the year 1747, the 'Ode to Eton College,' the first production of Gray that appeared in print, was published in folio, by Dodsley. Dr. Warton, in his Essay on Pope, informs us, that "little notice was taken of it, on its first publication."

Walpole wished him to print his own poems with those of his deceased friend West. This, however, he declined, thinking the materials not sufficient: but he complied with another wish of Walpole, in commemorating in an Ode the death of his favourite cat. To this little poem I may be permitted to apply the words of Cicero, when speaking of a work of his own: "Non est enim tale, ut in arte poni possit, quasi illa Minerva Phidiæ; sed tamen, ut ex eâdem officinâ, exisse appareat."* Soon after this, he sent to Dr. Wharton a part of his poem 'On the Alliance of Education and Government.' He never pursued this subject much further. About a hundred lines remain; and the commentary proceeds a little beyond the poem. Mr. Mason thinks that he dropped it from finding some of his best thoughts forestalled by M. de Montesquieu's L'Esprit des Loix,† which appeared at that time : and other reasons, which I have elsewhere stated, probably concurred in inducing him to leave unfinished, a very fine specimen of a philosophical poem. Some time after, says Mr. Mason, he had thoughts of resuming his plan, and of dedicating his poem by an introductory Ode to M. de Montesquieu ; but that great man's death, which happened in 1755, made him drop his design finally.

Gray was now forming for his own instruction a Table of Greek Chronology, which extended from the 30th to the 113th Olympiad, a period of 332 years ; and which, while it did not exclude public events, was chiefly designed to compare the time of all great men, their writings and transactions. Mr. Mason, who saw this work, says, " that every page was in nine columns : one for the Olympiad, the next for the Archons, the third for the Public Affairs of Greece, the three next for the Philosophers, and the three last for Poets, Historians, and Orators."*

Greek literature about this time seems to have been his constant study. He says in a letter ; " I have read Pausanias and Athenæus all through ; and Æschylus again. I am now in Pindar, and Lysias ; for I take verse and prose together, like bread and cheese."

In the year 1749, on the death of Mrs. Antrobus, his mother was deprived of a sister and affectionate companion ; which loss, if we may judge by a letter of Gray, was a most severe affliction. It is not improbable that this circumstance may have turned his thoughts towards finishing his ‘Elegy,’* which was commenced some time before. Whether that were the case or not, it now however received his last corrections, was communicated to Walpole, and handed about in manuscript with great applause, among the higher circles of society. It was so popular, that when it was printed, Gray expressed his surprise at the rapidity of the sale ; which Mr. Mason attributed, and, I think, justly, to the affecting and pensive cast of the subject. “It spread,” he said, “at first, on account of the affecting and pensive cast of the subject, just like Hervey’s Meditations on the Tombs. Soon after its publication, I remember sitting with Mr. Gray in his College apartment, he expressed to me his surprise at the rapidity of its sale. I replied:

‘Sunt lacrymæ rerum, et mentem mortalia tangunt.’

He paused awhile, and taking his pen, wrote the line on a printed copy of it lying on his table. ‘This,’ said he, ‘shall be its future motto.’ ‘Pity,’ cried I, ‘that Dr. Young’s Night Thoughts have pre-occupied it.’ ‘So,’ replied he, ‘indeed it is.’ He had more reason to think I had hinted at the true cause of its popularity, when he found how different a reception his two odes at first met with.”*

Pathetic composition, which is employed in describing to us our own griefs, or the sufferings of others, makes its way to the heart at once; it always finds some disposition of the mind favourable to receive it, some passion which cannot resist its power, some feelings which participate in its sorrows. Much time elapses, before works of elaborate structure, of lofty flight, and of learned allusion, gain possession of the public mind, and are placed in their proper rank in literature. While the ‘Bard’ and the ‘Progress of Poetry’ were but little read on their first appearance, Gray received at once the full measure of praise from the ‘Elegy:’ and perhaps even at this time, the Elegy† is the most popular of all his poems. Dr. Gregory, in a letter to Beattie, says: "It is a sentiment that very universally prevails, that Poetry is a light kind of reading, which one takes up only for a little amusement; and that therefore it should be so perspicuous as not to require a second reading. This sentiment would bear hard on some of your best things, and on all Gray's except his 'Church-yard Elegy,' which, he told me, with a good deal of acrimony, owed its popularity entirely to the subject, and that the public would have received it as well if it had been written in prose." And Dr. Beattie, writing to Sir William Forbes, says: "Of all the English poets of this age, Mr. Gray is most admired, and I think with justice; yet there are comparatively speaking, but a few who know any thing of his, but his 'Church-yard Elegy,' which is by no means the best of his works." This production was the occasion of the author's acquaintance with Lady Cobham, who lived in the manor-house at Stoke; and the way in which it commenced, was described by him in a poem called the 'Long Story.' The Elegy having now ap-Aristotle's Poetics. Since that time, it has been translated into the same language by Dr. Norbury, and Mr. Tew of Eton, Mr. Stephen Weston, and Dr. Coote. Its imitators also have been very numerous. The Bard was translated into Latin verse, in 1775. It is said that within the precincts of the church of Granchester, about two miles from Cambridge, Gray wrote his Elegy. The Curfew mentioned by the poet was of course the great bell of St. Mary's. V. Gent. Mag. May, 1814, p. 453.

peared in some of the periodical publications and magazines, and having been published with great inaccuracies, Gray requested Walpole to have it printed in a more respectable and accurate manner, by Dodsley, but without the apparent knowledge or approbation of the author. It is to be observed that in the early editions, the Elegy is not printed in stanzas of four lines, but continuously. It is also written in the same manner by Gray in the Pembroke and Wharton manuscripts. By this connected system of metre, the harmony of the poem acquires a fuller compass. Mason adopted it in his four Elegies; and it has been lately used by Mr. Roscoe in his translation of the Greek poem of Musurus, which Aldus prefixed to his edition of Plato.*

His thoughts, however, were for a short time called off from poetry, by the illness of his mother; and he hastened from Cambridge to attend upon her. Finding her better than he expected, he employed himself, during his stay, in superintending an edition of his poems, which was soon after published, with designs by Mr. Bentley,† the only son of the learned Dr. Bentley, and the friend of Walpole ; a person of various and elegant acquirements, as well as of very considerable talents. To him Gray addressed a Copy of Verses, highly extolling his powers as a painter. The original drawings in Walpole's possession, Mr. Mason says, are infinitely superior to the prints ; but even with this allowance, the praise must be considered rather friendly than just ; since their merit consists in the grotesque and quaint fancy which marks the designs ; in the whimsical manner in which the painter has embellished the images of the poet ; and which, if it were intended to correspond to the style of the ' Long Story,' would not be an unsuccessful effort of the sister-art. The tributes, however, which are paid by Friendship to Genius, ought not to be sparing or scanty : and Gray might remember the example of Dryden and of Pope, in their complimentary eulogies on Kneller.

In March 1753, he lost the mother, whom he had so long and so affectionately loved ; and he his uncle has completely libelled both his poet and his patron without intending to do so." Mr. Cumberland says, at p. 216 of the same volume, that Gray wrote an elaborate critique on a play of Bentley's writing called ' Philodamus,' which was acted at Covent Garden. For an account of R. Bentley see Brydges' Restituta, vol. iv. p. 364. Scott's Lives of the Novelists, vol. ii. p. 235. Boaden's Life of Mrs. Siddons, i. p. 360. R. Bentley died Oct. 1782

It is usually supposed that Gray's ' Ode on the Progress of Poetry' was written in 1755. From a letter to Walpole it appears that it was then finished, excepting a few lines at the end. He mentions his being so unfortunate as to come too late for Mr. Bentley's edition, and talks of inserting it in Dodsley's Collection. In 1754, it is supposed that he wrote the Fragment of ' An Ode to Vicissitude,' as it is now called. The idea and some of the lines are taken from Gresset's 'Épître sur sa Convalescence.' Another Ode was also sketched, which might be called ' The Liberty of Genius,' though some of Gray's biographers, for what reasons I am ignorant, have called it ' The Connection between Genius and Grandeur.' The argument of it, the only part which was ever written, is as follows: "All that men of power can do for men of genius is to leave them at their liberty; compared to birds that, when confined to a cage, do but regret the loss of their freedom in melancholy strains, and lose the luscious wildness and happy luxuriance of their notes, which used to make the woods resound." The supplement to this Poem is very inferior to the original, so that we may unite in opinion with an eminent critic, that it is better to leave the unfinished creations of genius in their imperfect form. 'Nobis placet exemplum Priscorum, qui Apelleam Venerem imperfectam maluerunt, quam integram manu extraneâ.'* Gray, as Walpole remarked, was indeed "in flower" these last three years. The 'Bard' was commenced, and part of it communicated to Mr. Stonehewer and Dr. Wharton, 1755. In these letters he for the first time complains of listlessness and depression of spirits, which prevented his application to poetry: and from this period we may trace the course of that hereditary disease in his constitution, which embittered in a considerable degree the remainder of his days; and the fatal strength of which, not even the temperance and regularity of a whole life could subdue. In his pocket journal for this year, besides a diary of the weather, and a very accurate calendar of observations on natural history, he kept a regular account of his health in Latin. By this it appears that his constitution was much enfeebled and impaired, that alarming attacks of the gout were perpetually recurring and disordering his frame. He speaks constantly of the sleepless night, and the feverish morning; and seems seldom to have been free from pain, debility, and disease. Expressions similar to the following, are in almost every page: ‘Insomnia crebra, atque expergiscenti surdus quidam doloris sensus; frequens etiam in regione sterni oppressio, et cardialgia gravis, fere sempiterna.’

“The Bard” was for some time left unfinished; but “the accident of seeing a blind harper (Mr. Parry) perform on a Welsh harp,* again (he says) put his Ode in motion, and brought it at last to a conclusion.”† This poem appears to have been submitted to the critical opinion of his friends. He mentions a remark upon it by Dr. Hurd; and he had recourse to the judgement of Mr. Mason, “whose cavils (Walpole says) almost induced him to destroy his two beautiful and sublime Odes.”

Some time previous to this, Dodsley had published his Collection of Poems, in three volumes,‡ which Walpole sent to Gray. The observations made by the latter, as they were not published in Mr. Mason's Life, and as it is interesting to read the opinions which he entertained of his poetical contemporaries, I shall extract from the letter to his friend, in as short a compass as I can.

“ To begin, (he says,) with Mr. Tickell :—This is not only a state poem (my ancient aversion), but a state poem on the Peace of Utrecht. If Mr. Pope had wrote a panegyric on it, one could hardly have read him with patience. But this is only a poor short-winded imitator of Addison, who had himself not above three or four notes in poetry ; sweet enough indeed, like those of a German flute, but such as soon tire and satiate the ear with their frequent return. Tickell has added to this a great poverty of sense, and a string of transitions that hardly become a school-boy. However, I forgive him for the sake of his Ballad, which I always thought the prettiest in the world. All there is of Mr. Green here, has been printed before ; there is a profusion of wit every where. Reading would have formed his judgment, and harmonized his verse ; for even his wood-notes often break out into strains of real poetry and music. The ‘ School-Mistress ’* is excellent in its kind, and masterly :

and 'London' is one of those few imitations that have all the ease and all the spirit of the original. The same man's* Verses at the Opening of Garrick's Theatre are far from bad. Mr. Dyer has more of poetry in his imagination, than almost any of our number; but rough, and injudicious. I should range Mr. Bramston only a step or two above Dr. King, who is as low in my estimation as in yours. Dr. Evans is a furious madman; and 'Pre-existence' is nonsense in all her altitudes. Mr. Lyttleton is a gentle elegiac person.† Mr. Nugent sure did not write his own Ode. I like Mr. Whitehead's little poems, (I mean The Ode on a Tent, The Verses to Garrick, and particularly those to Charles Townshend,) better than any thing I had ever seen before of him. I gladly pass over H. Brown and the rest, to come at you. You know I was of the publishing side, and thought your reasons against it—none: for though, as Mr. Chute said extremely well, 'the still small voice' of Poetry

His writings in prose abound with sound reflection, and knowledge of human nature; and are written in a neat and unaffected manner, displaying great benevolence of mind, and gentleness of disposition. Mr. Graves (the author of the Spiritual Quixote) wrote a pamphlet, called 'Recollections of some Particulars in the Life of William Shenstone, Esq. &c.' to vindicate his friend from the censure of Dr. Johnson, Gray, and Mason.

Mr. Brown, Seward, &c. . . . If I say, ‘ Messieurs ! this is not the thing : write prose, write sermons, write nothing at all,’ they will disdain me and my advice. Mr. S. Jenyns now and then can write a good line or two, such as these :

‘ Snatch us from all our little sorrows here,
Calm every grief, and dry each childish tear.’

I like Mr. Aston Hervey’s Fable ; and an Ode the the last of all, by Mr. Mason ; a new acquaintance of mine, whose Musæus too seems to carry with it the promise at least of something good to come. I was glad to see you distinguished who poor West was before his charming Ode, and called it any thing rather than a Pindaric. The Town is an owl, if it don’t like Lady Mary ; and I am surprised at it. We here are owls enough to think her Eclogues very bad : but that, I did not wonder at. Our present taste is Sir Thomas Fitzosborne’s Letters,” &c.*

In 1756 Gray left Peter-house, where he had resided above twenty years, on account of some incivilities he met with, which are slightly mentioned in his correspondence. He removed to Pembroke-hall, where his most intimate friends resided ; and this he describes, “ as an æra in a life so barren of events as his.”

* See Walpole’s Works, vol. v. p. 393.

In July 1757, he took his Odes to London, to be published. "I found Gray (says H. Walpole) in Town, last week. He brought his two Odes* to be printed. I snatched them out of Dodsley's hands, and they are to be the first-fruits of my press." Although the genius of Gray was now "in its firm and mature age," and though his poetical reputation was deservedly celebrated; it is plain that these Odes were not favourably received. "His friends (he says) write to him, that they do not succeed," and several amusing criticisms on them are mentioned in the Letters. Yet there were not wanting some better judges who admired them. They had received the judicious and valuable approbation of Mason and of Hurd;† and if Gray felt any pleasure in the poem which Garrick wrote in their praise, he must have been yet more gratified, when Warburton, while he bestowed on them his honest applause, shewed his indignation at those who condemned, without being able to understand them.‡

* Of these Odes, a thousand copies were printed at Strawberry-Hill.

† It is, I believe, to Gray that Hurd alludes in the Essay on the Marks of Imitation, as to the "common friend of Mason and himself," who had suggested an imitation of Spenser, by Milton: see vol. iii. p. 48.

‡ Gray's Odes were reviewed in the Monthly Review for 1757, p. 239. They were also reviewed in the Critical Review, vol. iv. p. 167; in which the critic mistook the Αἰολική μολπή (the Æolian lyre), for the Æolian harp, the instru-

About ten years before this time, the Odes of Collins* were published, and received with the most unmerited neglect. The public had been so long delighted with the wit and satire of Pope, had formed their taste so much on his manner of versification, and had been so accustomed to dwell upon the neat and pointed style of that finished writer; that they were but ill prepared to admire the beauties of the lofty and magnificent language, in which Collins arrayed his sublime conceptions; and which was tasteless to those, who, but a few years before, had received the last book of the Dunciad, from the dying hands of their favourite poet; and who could not pass from wit, and epigram, and satire, to the bold conceptions, the animated descriptions, and the wild grandeur of lyric poetry.† The very ment invented by Kircher about 1649; and, after being forgotten for a century, discovered by Mr. Oswald. A passage in this Review, suggested to Dr. Johnson an objection of which he made use, in his criticism on Gray; viz. "Is there not, (says the Critical Review) a trifling impropriety in this line, 'Weave the warp, and weave the woof;'—Is not the warp laid, and the woof afterwards woven? Suppose he had written 'Stretch the warp, and weave the woof.'" Compare Johnson's Life of Gray, vol. xi. p. 377, ed. Murphy.

* The Odes of Collins were published in 1746. The open manner in which Goldsmith in his Threnod. Aug. borrowed whole lines and stanzas from Collins, is a strong proof how little Collins' Poems were then known.

works which have now raised Gray and Collins to rank as our two greatest lyric poets, were either neglected, or ridiculed by their contemporaries; while, to appreciate the justness of their thoughts, the harmony of their numbers, and the splendid creations of their genius, was left for the more correct decisions of time.

Those who are really competent judges of the merit of poetry, in any age, are necessarily but few; the great and general mass of poetical readers are constantly varying among the favourites of the time; raising with their breath the bubble of that reputation to-day, which they take the same pains to destroy to-morrow.

But a poet who receives the praise of an enlightened age, may with confidence expect its continuance; if he write, not for the fluctuation of taste, nor the caprice of fashion; but on his own extended views of nature, on his own confirmed knowledge and experience, and on the solid principles of the art. He who acquires the admiration of the present time, by addressing himself to their taste, by following their judgment, and by soliciting their applause, may be sure that his productions will be superseded by the favourite rivals of the

 was the sensible advice of Longinus,* to those, who “with a noble ambition aim at immortality.”

There is a passage in the Life of Thomson written by his friend, in which he mentions the reason of the discouragement shewn, by some critics of that day, to the poetry of that interesting writer; and which applies equally in the case of Collins and of Gray; as the same cause that impeded the favourable reception of the Seasons, still continued to exert its powerful influence. “The Poem of Winter, (says Mr. Murdoch, who speaks from his own observation,) was no sooner read, than universally admired; those only excepted, who had not been used to feel, or to look for any thing in poetry beyond a point of satirical or epigrammatic wit; a smart antithesis richly trimmed with rhyme; or the softness of an elegiac complaint. To such his manly classical spirit could not readily recommend itself; till after a more attentive perusal, they had got the better of their prejudices, and either acquired, or affected a truer taste. A few others stood aloof, merely because they had long before fixed the articles of their poetical creed, and resigned themselves to an absolute despair of ever seeing any thing new and original.” From that time, till after the death of Gray, the strong and almost exclusive influence of Pope’s versification was felt on English poetry. Mason, speaking of Gray's Hymn or Address to Ignorance, says,—“Many of the lines are so strong, and the general cast of the versification so musical, that I believe it will give the generality of readers a higher opinion of his poetical talents, than many of his lyrical productions would have done. I speak of the generality; for it is a certain fact, that their taste is founded upon the ten syllable couplet of Dryden and Pope, and of these only.”

In this year Cibber died at an advanced age, and the Laureatship was offered by the Duke of Devonshire, then Lord Chamberlain, to Gray; with a remarkable and honourable privilege, to hold it as a mere sinecure. This he respectfully declined; and some of his reasons for refusing it, he gives in a letter to Mr. Mason: “The office itself (he says) has always humbled the possessor hitherto:—if he were a poor writer, by making him more conspicuous; and if he were a good one, by setting him at war with the little fry of his own profession; for there are poets little enough, even to envy a poet-laureat.”*

Upon Gray's refusal, the laurel was accepted by Mr. Whitehead, who joined to very competent talents, what made those talents respectable—modesty and worth. Mr. Mason had by him letters of Gray, in which he gave Whitehead's first and second odes great encomiums. To Cibber indeed, he was in every respect infinitely superior: but it is no disgrace to Mr. Whitehead to affirm, that to the genius of that poet who succeeded him, we are indebted for the finest productions that have ever ennobled an office, in itself not most friendly to the Muses. Mr. Mason was not quite overlooked on this occasion. “Lord John Cavendish (he says) made an apology to him, ‘that being in orders, he was thought less eligible than a lay man.’” A little tinge of that satire which occasionally darted its shafts into the world from the retirement of Aston, is now visible in Mr. Mason’s narrative,* when he adds, “that he wonders the same privilege, of holding the office as a sinecure, was not offered to Mr. Whitehead; as the king would readily have dispensed with hearing poetry, for which he had no taste, and music, for which he had no ear.”†

In 1758, Gray describes himself as composing, for his own amusement, the little book which he calls ‘A Catalogue of the Antiquities, Houses, &c., in England and Wales;’ and which he drew up on the blank pages of Kitchen’s English Atlas. After his death it was printed and distributed by Mr. Mason to his friends.‡

‡ A new edition was printed in 1787 for sale. Mr. Mason’s was only intended for presents.

About this period, much of his time seems to have been employed in the study of architecture ; in which his proficiency, as indeed in all other branches of learning which he pursued, was accurate and deep. Some of his observations on this subject afterwards appeared in Mr. Bentham's History of Ely. In the Gentleman's Magazine for April 1784, a letter from Gray to Mr. Bentham is published, which contains all the information afforded to the latter. It was printed in consequence of the circulation of a report, that the whole of the Treatise on Saxon, Norman, and Gothic Architecture, published in the History of Ely, was written by Gray.* On the 15th of January 1759, the British Museum was opened to the public ; and Gray went to London to read and transcribe the manuscripts which were collected there from the Harleian and Cottonian libraries. A folio volume of his transcripts was in Mr. Mason's hands : out of which, one paper alone—The speech of Sir Thomas Wyatt † before the Privy Council—was published in the second number of Lord Orford's Miscellaneous Antiquities ; but, as I understand

He was, as Dr. Johnson observed, but little affected by two Odes of Obscurity and Oblivion † written by Messrs. Colman and Lloyd, which then appeared in ridicule of him, and Mr. Mason. The humour of these poems, in my opinion, has been much over-praised. Warburton calls them "two miserable buffoon Odes." ‡ Like all other productions of a personal and satirical nature, their subject ensured to them a short period of popularity. We know with what avidity those works are perused, which hold up to the derision of the public the peculiarities of genius and learning. Almost every author of talent, at some time or other, becomes the mark at which ridicule is aimed. In this particular case, the most modest and retired habits, as well as the most exalted talents, were dragged out with circumstances of laughter and contempt, by men very inferior to Gray, either in the strictness of their moral character, or in the depth and extent of their literary attainments. Yet, while I think their ridicule was not happy or successful, I do not see those marks of rancour and malevolence in their design, which so often im-bitter and disgrace the Satires of Churchill;* which the intemperance of youth, I am afraid, can hardly excuse; and which must raise constant disgust in those, who read the works of that powerful, though unfinished writer. Dr. Warton, in his notes on Pope,† says, “The Odes of Gray were burlesqued by two men of wit and genius; who, however, once owned to me, that they repented of the attempt.”

During Gray's residence in London, he became slightly acquainted with the amiable naturalist Mr. Stillingfleet, whose death took place a few months after his own.‡ At the request of Mr. Montagu, he wrote an ‘Epitaph on Sir William Williams,’ who was killed at the siege of Belleisle. In 1762 the professorship of modern history became vacant by the death of Mr. Turner. By the advice of his friends, he applied to Lord Bute for the place, through the medium of Sir Henry Erskine. He was refused; and the professorship was given to Mr. Brocket, the tutor of Sir James Lowther. "And so (says Gray, humorously passing over his disappointment) I have made my fortune like Sir Francis Wronghead."

Mrs. Chapone, in a Letter dated 1764, says,—“You keep my genius down continually by throwing cold water on its dying embers; and terrifying my poor muse, as much as Churchill does that of Gray.” Chapone's Letters, vol. ii. p. 164, date 1764.

In the summer of 1765, he took a journey into Scotland, to improve his health, which was becoming more weak and uncertain, as well as to gratify his curiosity with the natural beauties and antiquities of that wild and romantic country. He went through Edinburgh and Perth to Glames-Castle, the residence of Lord Strathmore, where he stayed some time. Thence he took a short excursion into the Highlands, crossing Perthshire by Loch-Tay, and pursuing the road from Dunkeld to Inverness, as far as the pass of Gillikrankie. Then returning to Dunkeld, he travelled on the Stirling road to Edinburgh. "His account of his journey, (says Dr. Johnson,) so far as it extends, is curious and elegant: for as his comprehension was ample, his curiosity extended to all the works of art, all the appearances of nature, and all the monuments of past events." In Scotland he formed an acquaintance with Dr. Beattie; who had been the first to welcome him on his arrival in the North, with a testimony of the high admiration in which he held his genius and his character; and which was truly valuable, because it was the voluntary praise of one, who himself possessed the feeling, and power of a poet. I transcribe Dr. Beattie's Letter, from his Life, published by Sir William Forbes :—

“ Marischal College of Aberdeen,
30th of August, 1765.

“ If I thought it necessary to offer an apology for venturing to address you in this abrupt manner, I should be very much at a loss how to begin. I might plead my admiration of your genius, and my attachment to your character; but who is he that could not with truth urge the same excuse for intruding upon your retirement? I might plead my earnest desire to be personally acquainted with a man, whom I have so long and so passionately admired in his writings; but thousands, of greater consequence than I, are ambitious of the same honour. I, indeed, must either flatter myself that no apology is necessary, or otherwise, I must despair of obtaining what has long been the object of my most ardent wishes. I must for ever forfeit all hopes of seeing you, and conversing with you.

“ It was yesterday I received the agreeable news of your being in Scotland, and of your intending to visit some parts of it. Will you permit us to hope, that we shall have an opportunity at Aberdeen, of thanking you in person, for the honour you have done to Britain, and to the poetic art, by your inestimable compositions, and of offering you all that we have that deserves your acceptance; namely, hearts full of esteem, respect and affection? If you cannot come so far northward, let me at least be acquainted with the place of your residence, and permitted to wait on you. Forgive, sir, this request: forgive me, if I urge it with earnestness, for indeed it concerns me nearly: and do me the justice to believe, that I am with the most sincere attachment, and most respectful esteem," &c.

Gray declined the honour which the University of Aberdeen was disposed to confer on him, (of the degree of doctor of laws,) lest it might appear a slight and contempt of his own University, "where (he says) he passed so many easy and happy hours of his life, where he had once lived from choice, and continued to do so from obligation." In one of his conversations with Dr. Beattie,* who expressed himself with less admiration of Dryden than Gray thought his due; he told him, "that if there was any excellence in his own numbers, he had learned it wholly from that great poet; and pressed him with great earnestness to study him, as his choice of words and versification was singularly happy and harmonious."—"Remember Dryden, (he also wrote,) and be blind to all his faults."†

† Mr. Mason, in his Life of Whitehead, p. 17, says

Part of the summer of 1766 Gray passed in a tour in Kent, and at the house of his friend Mr. Robinson, on the skirts of Barham Down. In a letter in my possession, from Mrs. Robinson to a friend, dated June 2, 1766, she says: "I have met with several interruptions, partly owing to our having had for almost a fortnight a very agreeable gentleman in the house, whose conversation is both instructive and entertaining; after what I have said, you will wish to hear his name---'tis Mr. Gray---who is well known for having wrote several pretty elegies; he is also an acquaintance of your friend Mr. Rycroft," &c.* In 1767 he again left "that Gray, who admired Dryden almost beyond bounds, used to say of a very juvenile poem of his, in Tonson's Miscellany, written on the Death of Lord Halifax, that it gave not so much as the slightest promise of his future excellency, and seemed to indicate a bad natural ear for versification. I believe Derrick reprinted this poem in his edition of Dryden." There is no poem that I can discover by Dryden on the Death of Lord Halifax; but I suppose Mr. Mason meant a Poem on the Death of Lord Hastings, (See Scott's Life of Dryden, p. 28.) written when Dryden was only eighteen, and at Westminster School, and which is the first poem in Derrick's Collection; and is also in p. 116 of the first volume of Tonson's Miscellany. These lines are certainly most singularly inharmonious, with much of the strained allusion and rough style of Donne. At the end of 'Halifax's Miscellanies,' there is an anonymous poem to his memory, of considerable merit; but I am not able to say by whom it is written. See also Mason's Works, vol. i. p. 451.

Cambridge, and went to the North of England, on a visit to Dr. Wharton. He had intended a second tour to Scotland, but returned to London without accomplishing his design. At Dr. Beattie's desire, a new edition of his Poems was published by Foulis at Glasgow; and at the same time Dodsley was also printing them in London. In both these editions, the 'Long Story' was omitted, as the plates from Bentley's designs were worn out: and Gray said, "that its only use, which was to explain the prints, was gone." Some pieces of Welsh and Norwegian Poetry, written in a bold and original manner,* were inserted in its place: of which the 'Descent of Odin' is undoubtedly the most valuable, though in many places it is exceedingly obscure. I have mentioned, in the notes to this poem, that Gray translated only that part of it which he found in the Latin version of Bartholinus; and to this cause much of the obscurity is owing. In a letter to Walpole† he says, "As to what you say to me civilly,---that I ought to write more,---I reply in our own words, like the pamphleteer who is going to confute you out of your own mouth; 'What has one to do, when turned of fifty, but really to think of finishing?' However, I will be candid, for you seem to be so with me, and avow to you, that till fourscore and upward, whenever the humour takes me, I will write; because I like it, and because I like myself better when I do so. If I do not write much, it is because I cannot."—"Gray," says Walpole, "has added to his Poems three ancient odes from Norway and Wales. The subjects of the two first are grand and picturesque, and there is his genuine vein in them; but they are not interesting, and do not, like his other poems, touch any passion: our human feelings, which he masters at will in his finer pieces, are not here affected. Who can care through what horrors a Runic savage arrived at all the joys and glories they could conceive,---the supreme felicity of boozing ale out of the skull of an enemy in Odin's Hall?"* To his Odes, Gray now found it necessary to add some notes, "Partly (he says) from justice, to acknowledge a debt when I had borrowed anything: partly from ill-temper, just to tell the gentle reader, that Edward the First was not Oliver Cromwell, nor Queen Elizabeth the Witch of Endor,"† Walpole in a letter to G. Montagu, says: "You are very particular, I can tell you, in liking Gray's Odes; but you must remember the age likes Akenside, and did like Thomson, Can the same people like both? Milton was forced to wait till the world had done admiring Quarles.

Cambridge told me t'other night, that my Lord Chesterfield had heard Stanly read them as his own, but that must have been a mistake of my Lord's deafness. Cambridge said---'Perhaps they are Stanly's, and not caring to own them, he gave them to Gray.' I think this would hurt Gray's dignity ten times more than his Poetry not succeeding."

In 1768 the professorship of modern history again became vacant by the accidental death of Mr. Brocket; and the Duke of Grafton, then in power, at the request of Mr. Stonehewer, immediately bestowed it upon Gray.* In 1769, on the death of the Duke of Newcastle,† the Duke of Grafton was elected to the chancellorship of the University. His installation took place in the summer; and Gray wrote his fine Ode that was set to music on the occasion: "He thought it better that Gratitude should sing, than Expectation."‡ He told Dr. Beattie, "that he considered himself bound in gratitude to the Duke of Grafton, to write this Ode ; and that he foresaw the abuse that would be thrown on him for it, but did not think it worth his while to avoid it." He did not appear to set much value on the poem, for he says, " it cannot last above a single day, or if its existence be prolonged beyond that period, it must be by means of newspaper-parodies, and witless criticism." Posterity however has more correctly estimated this beautiful production, than the author ; it is a very splendid creation raised on an apparently barren subject.*

When this ceremony was past, he went on a tour to the Lakes of Cumberland and Westmoreland. His friend Dr. Wharton, who was to be his companion on the journey, was seized with the return of an asthmatic attack on the first day, and went home. To this accident we are indebted for a most elegant and lively journal of his tour, intended for his friend's amusement. The style in which these letters are written, is evidently the production of a person thoroughly accustomed to the contemplation of his subject ; it is peculiarly clear, simple and elegant ; and abounds with those picturesque descriptions, which, though they can never enable language totally to supply, can at least make it much assist, the local powers of the pencil. “He that reads his epistolary narrative (says Dr. Johnson) wishes, that to travel, and to tell his travels, had been more of his employment: but it is by staying at home, that we must obtain the ability of travelling with intelligence and improvement.”

In April 1770 he complains much of a depression of spirits, talks of an intended tour into Wales in the summer, and of meeting his friend Dr. Wharton at Mr. Mason's. In July, however, he was still at Cambridge, and wrote to Dr. Beattie, complaining of illness and pain in his head; and in this letter, he sent him some criticisms on the first book of the Minstrel, which have since been published.* His tour took place in the autumn: but not a single letter is preserved in Mr. Mason's book on this journey, to any of his correspondents. He wrote no journal, and travelled with Mr. Nicholls, † of Blundeston, in Suffolk, a gentleman of much accomplishment, and who was admitted more than any other person, into intimate and unreserved friendship with Gray. He was I believe the Octavius of the Pursuits of Literature. The sketch of his life was written by Mr. Mathias, in 1809, in the Gent. Mag. and subsequently enlarged. The letters of Gray to Mr. Nicholls, which Mr. Dawson Turner possesses, fully prove the truth of Mr. Mathias's belief—'that with the single exception of Mr. West, Gray was more affectionately attached to him than to any other person.'

In May 1771 he wrote to Dr. Wharton, just sketching the outlines of his Tour in Wales and some of the adjacent Counties. This is the last letter that remains in Mr. Mason's Collection. He there complains of an incurable cough, of spirits habitually low, and of the uneasiness which the thought of the duties of his professorship gave him, which, after having held nearly three years, Mr. Mason says he had now a determined resolution to resign. He mentions also different plans of amusement and travel, that he had projected ;

but which unfortunately were not to be accomplished. Within a few days after the date of this last letter, he removed to London, where his health more and more declined. His physician, Dr. Gisborne, advised freer air, and he went to Kensington. There he in some degree revived, and returned to Cambridge, intending to go from that place to Old Park, near Durham, the residence of his friend Dr. Wharton.* In the spring of 1769 or 1770, his friend Mr. Robinson saw Gray for the last time, in his lodgings in Jermyn Street. He was then ill, and in a state of apparent decay, and low spirits. He expressed regret that he had done so little in literature; and began to lament, that at last, when he had become easy in his circumstances, he had lost his health. But in this he checked himself, feeling that it was wrong to repine at the decrees of Providence. On the 24th of July, while at dinner in the College hall, he was seized with an attack of the gout † in his stomach. The violence of the disease resisted all the powers of medicine: on the 29th he was seized with convulsions, which returned more violently on the 30th; and he expired in the evening of that day, in the fifty-fifth year of his age; sensible almost to the last: aware of his danger, and expressing, says his friend Dr. Brown, no visible concern at the thought of his approaching death. The care of his funeral devolved on one of his executors Dr. Brown, the president of Pembroke-hall; who saw him buried, as he desired in his will, by the side of his mother, in the church-yard of Stoke. His other executor and friend Mr. Mason was at that time absent in a distant part of Yorkshire, and when Dr. Brown wrote to him during Gray's short illness, he says, "as I felt strongly at the time what Tacitus has so well expressed on a similar occasion, I may with propriety use his words: 'Mihi, præter acerbitatem amici erepti, auget mœstitiam, quod adsidere valetudini. fovere deficientem, satiari vultu, complexu non contigit.' Such was the life of Gray, who, however few

† In a letter from Paris, August 11, 1771, H. Walpole says, on hearing the report of Gray's death,—“He called on me, but two or three days before I came hither: he complained of being ill, and talked of the gout in his stomach; but I expected his death no more than my own.”

* In 1778 Mason erected a monument for Gray in Westminster Abbey, with the following inscription, which seems to have this defect, that it is as much applicable to a monument to Milton, as to Gray:

"No more the Grecian muse unrivall'd reigns,
To Britain let the nations homage pay;
She felt a Homer's fire, in Milton's strains, his works,* must still hold a very distinguished rank among the English poets, for the excellence of his compositions, and for the splendour of his genius. Though the events of his life which I have briefly sketched, are of common occurrence, and offer nothing in themselves to excite great interest in the reader; yet there is surely some pleasure in contemplating the progress of a virtuous and enlightened mind, early withdrawn from public life to the stillness of the academic cloister; and confining its pleasures and prospects within the serenity of a studious retirement. Nor is it, I think, without some feelings of admiration, that we reflect on the history of a life so constantly, and unremittingly, devoted to the pursuit of knowledge, and the general improvement of the mind, for its own sake, and as a final purpose. Motives, which have no honourable connection with literature, are yet often instrumental in increasing it. The pursuit of wealth, of station, or of rank in a profession, is the constant and common incentive to mental exertion; and is dignified, perhaps not improperly, by the name of honest ambition. Even among those of a nobler nature, the desire of being distinguished in their own, and after-ages, for the * “ Gray joins to the sublimity of Milton the elegance and harmony of Pope; and nothing is wanting, to render him, perhaps, the first poet in the English language, but to have written a little more.”—A. Smith’s Theory of Moral Sentiments, vol. i. p. 255.

endowments of their mind, and the energies of their genius, acts as a perpetual spur towards the increase of their exertions. Much of this feeling does not appear to have existed in the mind of Gray. To him, study seemed to bring all the reward he asked, in its own gratification; and his progress in learning was constant; even in the absence of those quickening motives, which, in almost all cases, are necessary to preserve men, either from weariness in the toil of original composition, or from indolence in the acquisition, and arrangement, of the materials of collected knowledge. That the publications of Gray, however, were so few, is to be attributed, I think, to several causes:—to the natural modesty and reservedness of his disposition; to the situation of life in which he was placed, without any profession or public duty that might lead his thoughts, and studies in a particular direction; to his habit of submitting nothing to publication, without bestowing on it that polish and correctness, which demands long and patient attention, and which indeed seems incompatible with works of any magnitude or number: to the extent and variety of his research; and to the great temptations to read,* in a place which afforded a ready and almost boundless supply of materials to satisfy him in any branch of knowledge; and which would constantly induce him, to make fresh accessions to his information, and to open new channels of inquiry. "I shall be happy (says Mr. Mason in a letter to Dr. Beattie) to know that the remaining books of your 'Minstrel' are likewise to be published soon. The next best thing, after instructing the world profitably, is to amuse it innocently. England has lost that man (Gray) who, of all others in it, was best qualified for both these purposes ; but who, from early chagrin and disappointment, had imbibed a disinclination to employ his talents beyond the sphere of self-satisfaction and improvement."

Of Gray's person, his biographer has given no account: and Lord Orford* has but just mentioned it. The earliest picture of him, is that which was taken when he was fifteen years of age, by Richardson. It is now in the possession of Mr. Robinson of Cambridge, and by his permission has been engraved. Another portrait was painted by Eckardt, and engraved in the Works of Lord Orford.† It is at Strawberry-Hill, and the design was taken from the Portrait of a Musician, by Vandyck, at the Duke of Grafton's. This print was intended to be prefixed to Bentley's edition of Gray's Odes, with a motto from Lucan, (x. 296).

but Gray's extreme repugnance to the proposal, obliged his friends to drop it after the engraving was commenced. The print which Mr. Mason placed before his edition of the Life of Gray in quarto, was from a picture by Wilson, drawn after the death of Gray, from his own and Mr. Mason's recollection ; and which is now in the possession of Pembroke-College, by the bequest of Mr. Stonehewer. The engraving, however, has not preserved the character of the countenance, and is, on the whole, an unfavourable likeness. It is from this same picture, I understand, that the print prefixed to Mr. Mathias's edition is taken. To the edition of the Life in octavo, is prefixed a better resemblance, etched by W. Doughty,† from a drawing by Mr. Mason : and from this outline, two other portraits have proceeded : one by a Mr. Sharpe of Cambridge ; and the other, which is now extremely rare, by the late Mr. Henshaw, a pupil

The Political opinions of Gray, H. Walpole says he never rightly understood: "sometimes he seemed inclined to the side of authority, and sometimes to that of the people."‡ Mr. Mason has mentioned nothing concerning any singularity in his sentiments about Religion; and there is, I believe, no passage in his published Letters, either to support, or absolutely to oppose, the assertion made on this subject in the Walpoliana.§ I must confess myself disinclined to believe it, in any degree, upon the authority of a few words, apparently used in conversation, and which afterwards appeared, without proof or comment, in an anonymous publication. The personal friends of Gray, who could have cleared up this point, are, I believe all dead: but I cannot find, that, in the place where he so constantly resided, or among those who have enjoyed the best opportunities of hearing about his opinions, the slightest suspicions existed, which could at all confirm the assertion of Walpole. It is a consideration of no small weight, that these supposed opinions of Gray have been delivered on the authority of two writers, neither of them, I believe, favourable to the cause of Christianity.* I shall merely mention, that in a letter to Mr. Mason,† speaking of Rousseau's 'Lettres de la Montagne,' he says: "It is a weak attempt to separate miracles from the morality of the Gospel; the latter he would think, he believes was sent from God, and the former he very explicitly takes for an imposture." In a letter to H. Walpole,‡ he gives an account of some manuscript writings of Middleton against Waterland, on the doctrine of the Trinity; but he expresses an approbation of no other part of them than of the style. He tells Dr. Wharton,§—"Though I do not approve the spirit of his (Middleton's) books; methinks 'tis pity the world should lose so rare a thing as a good writer." Whenever Gray writes to his friends on religious subjects, it is with uncommon seriousness, warmth, and piety. Even Walpole calls him "a violent enemy of atheists, such as he took Voltaire and Hume to be." His sentiments on Shaftesbury and Bolingbroke are well known: and Mr. Mason* has very properly pointed out to the attention of his readers, the scorn and contempt with which he invariably mentions the works of those writers who endeavoured to disseminate the baneful doctrines of infidelity.

—"In conversation, H. Walpole † mentions, that Gray was so circumspect in his usual language, that it seemed unnatural, though it was only pure English." In a letter to G. Montagu he says, "I agree with you most absolutely in your opinion about Gray: he is the worst company in the world. From a melancholy turn, from living reclusely, and from a little too much dignity, he never converses easily; all his words are measured and chosen and formed into sentences. His writings are admirable, he himself is not agreeable:" and in another letter, "My Lady Ailesbury has been much diverted, and so will you too. Gray is in their neighbourhood. My Lady Carlisle says, he is extremely like me in his manner. They went a party to dine on a cold loaf, and passed the day. Lady A. protests he never opened his lips but once, and then only said, 'Yes, my Lady, I believe so.' " † Dr. Beattie writes,* “ Gray’s letters very much resemble what his conversation was. He had none of the airs of either a scholar or a poet ; and though on those and all other subjects he spoke to me with the utmost freedom, and without any reserve, he was, in general company, much more silent than one could have wished.” And in a letter to Sir William Forbes, he says,—“ I am sorry you did not see Mr. Gray on his return : you would have been much pleased with him. Setting aside his merit as a poet, which, however, in my opinion, is greater than any of his contemporaries can boast, in this or any other nation ; I found him possess of the most exact taste, the soundest judgment, and the most extensive learning. He is happy in a singular facility of expression. His conversation abounds in original observations, delivered with no appearance of sententious formality, and seeming to arise spontaneously, without study or premeditation. I passed two very agreeable days with him at Glamis, and found him as easy in his manners, and as communicative and frank, as I could have wished.”†

Pembroke College, who died at Walthamstow," (says Mr. Cradock,) "I obtained at times many specimens of Gray's peculiar humour. Gray's satire on Lord Holland's seat at Kingsgate, was at first denied to be his. When stories were told of Gray by those who knew him, they were thought so unlike, that several were imputed to Dr. Johnson, nay, were even printed among the Johnsonia, which Mr. Boswell says, the Doctor was much offended at. I can give one strong instance: Dr. Johnson is made to reply to some impudent man, 'that in that face the north-west wind would have the worst of it.' Now, the truth was this: some friends of mine were educated at Christ's Hospital, and went from thence to Pembroke Hall, in Cambridge, where Gray then resided; one of them was rather a favourite of Gray, but to another he had taken a particular dislike. Standing by the fire in the Hall, the offensive gentleman, who was then curate of Newmarket, thus addressed the celebrated poet: 'Mr. Gray, I have just rode from Newmarket, and never was so cut in my life, the north-west wind was full in my face.' Gray, turning to the Rev. Mr. Sparrow, said, 'I think in that face the north-west wind would have the worst of it.' This I had from Mr. Sparrow. Again, it was the custom at Cambridge, when a book was ordered at a coffee-house, that four subscribers' names should be previously signed. The young men, knowing that Mr. Pigot wished to be particularly thought to be the intimate of Gray, and Mr. Gray equally wished not to be considered as the intimate of Mr. Pigot, so contrived it, that Gray expressed his anger, that wherever he wrote his name, the next was erased, and Mr. Pigot's inserted in its stead ; and, according to his peculiar humour, he said to my friend, ' That man's name wherever I go, piget, he Pigot's me.' This was true, but could not then be credited.' '*

To record the trifling and minute peculiarities of manners, unless they reflect considerable light upon the character which is delineated, does not seem to be a necessary part of the duty of a biographer. The little and singular habits of behaviour which are gradually formed in the seclusion of a studious life, are not always viewed in a just light, and without prejudice, by our contemporaries ; and at a distance of time they are necessarily represented without those nice, but discriminating touches that belong to them ; and are stripped of that connection of circumstances, with which they can alone be painted with justness and precision. Some few observations, however, of this nature, made by the friends of Gray, I have placed in this edition, without presuming myself to make any remarks on their correctness : but I have great pleasure in adding a slight sketch of his character, drawn by a contemporary poet, the late translator of Æschylus.*—“ If there is a writer (says Mr. Potter) who more than others has a claim to be exempted from his [Dr. Johnson’s] petulance, Mr. Gray has that claim. His own polished manners restrained him from ever giving offence to any good man ; his warm and cheerful benevolence endeared him to all his friends ; though he lived long in a college, he lived not sullenly there, but in a liberal intercourse with the wisest and most virtuous men of his time. He was perhaps the most learned man of the age, but his mind never contracted the rust of pedantry. He had too good an understanding to neglect that urbanity which renders society pleasing : his conversation was instructing, elegant, and agreeable. Superior knowledge, an exquisite taste in the fine arts, and, above all, purity of morals, and an unaffected reverence for religion, made this excellent person an ornament to society, and an honour to human nature.”

Soon after the death of Gray, a sketch of his character was drawn up by the Rev. Mr. Temple.†

He published an Essay on the Clergy, their Studies, Recreations, Doctrines, Influence, &c., 1774, 8vo. See Annual Register, 1796, p. 64. He also published ‘ Historical and Political Memoirs,’ 8vo. ; and

This account has been adopted both by Mr. Mason and Dr. Johnson : it was considered by the former to be an impartial summary of its character, and it seems therefore not improper to introduce it into this narrative ; though I must confess that, in my own opinion, it appears to be defective in several material points ; nor is it sketched in that masterly and decisive manner, that leaves a fuller likeness scarcely to be desired. Its prominent defect however is, that it has thrown into the back-ground the peculiar and distinguishing features of the mind of Gray ;—I mean his poetical invention, and his rich and splendid imagination ;—while it is too exclusively confined in detailing the produce of his studies, and the extent of his acquired knowledge. Nor is any mention made in this portrait of his mental character, of that talent of humour* which he possessed in a very considerable degree ; and

This character of Gray originally appeared in the London Magazine for March 1772. “ I never saw Mr. Gray, but my old and most intimate friend the Rev. Mr. Temple knew him well ; he knew his foibles, but admired his genius, and esteemed his virtues. I know not if you was acquainted with Mr. Gray. He was so abstracted and singular a man, that I can suppose you and him never to have met.” Boswell to Garrick, v. which was displayed, both in his conversation, and correspondence. Lord Orford used to assert, "that Gray never wrote any thing easily, but things of humour;" and added, "that humour was his natural and original turn." Mr. Hey mentions Gray as excelling in delicate and well-bred ridicule.* A late writer (Dr. Campbell) has remarked "the transcendant excellence of Shakspeare in the province of humour, as well as in the pathetic;"† and I have elsewhere had occasion to observe, how strongly the bent of Gray's mind inclined towards this latter quality of composition; and with what distinguishing features it appears in his poetry. The examples of these two eminent writers whom I have mentioned, appear sufficiently to strengthen the excellent observation made by Mr. D. Stewart, in a note to his Philosophical Essays (p. 584): "that a talent for the pathetic, and a talent for humour, are generally united in the same person: wit," he observes, "is more nearly allied to a taste for the sublime."

To return, however, to the observations of Mr. Temple:—"Perhaps (he writes) Mr. Gray was the most learned man in Europe: he was equally acquainted with the elegant and profound parts of science, and that, not superficially, but thoroughly. He knew every branch of history both natural and civil ; had read all the original historians of England, France, and Italy ; and was a great antiquarian. Criticism, metaphysics, morals, politics,* made a principal part of his study. Voyages and Travels of all sorts were his favourite amusements ; and he had a fine taste in painting, prints, architecture, and gardening.† With such a fund of knowledge, his conversation must have been equally

* How comprehensive the account is, which Mr. Temple gives of the studies of Gray, which embraced criticism, metaphysics, morals, and politics, may be seen by comparing it with the following passage of Hume, as quoted by Mr. D. Stewart in his Life of Reid, p. lviii. “In these four sciences, of logic, (which is here meant, says Mr. Stewart, as that science which explains the principles and operations of our reasoning faculty, and the nature of our ideas,) morals, criticism, and politics, is comprehended almost every thing which it can any way import us to be acquainted with ; or which can tend to the improvement or ornament of the human mind.”

† Mr. Mason says that Gray disclaimed any skill in gardening, and held it in little estimation ; declaring himself to be only charmed with the bolder features of unadorned nature. See also in Mason’s English Garden, book iii. 25, the speech which he puts into the mouth of Gray, as agreeable to his sentiments :

“ — Sovereign queen ! —

Behold, and tremble, while thou view’st her state
Throned on the heights of Skiddaw : call thy art
To build her such a throne ; that art will feel
How vain her best pretensions ! trace her march
Amid the purple crags of Borrow-dale ;
And try like those, to pile thy range of rock,
In rude tumultuous chaos !”

instructing and entertaining. But he was also a good man, a man of virtue and humanity. There is no character without some speck, some imperfection ; and I think the greatest defect in his, was an affectation in delicacy* or rather effeminacy, and a visible fastidiousness or contempt and disdain of his inferiors in science. He also had in some degree that weakness which disgusted Voltaire so much in Congreve. Though he seemed to value others chiefly according to the progress they had made in knowledge, yet he could not bear to be considered merely as a man of letters : and though without birth, or fortune, or station, his desire was to be looked upon as a private independent gentleman, who read for his amusement. Perhaps it may be said, What signifies so much knowledge, when it produced so little ? Is it worth taking so much pains, to leave no memorials but a few poems ? But let it be considered, that Mr. Gray was to others at least innocently employed ; to himself, certainly beneficially. His time passed agreeably ; he was every day making some new acquisition in science. His mind was enlarged, his heart softened, his virtue strengthened. The world and mankind were shown to him without a mask ; and he was taught to consider every thing as trifling, and unworthy the attention of a wise man, except the pursuit of knowledge, and practice of virtue, in that state, wherein God has placed us."

To this account Mr. Mason has added more particularly, from the information of Mr. Tyson,* of Bene't College, that Gray's skill in zoology was extremely accurate. He had not only concentrated in his Linnæus, all that other writers had said, but had altered the style of the Swedish naturalist, to classical and elegant Latin. From modern writers he had also illustrated many difficult passages in the zoological treatises of Aristotle. His account of English Insects was more perfect than any that had then appeared ; and it has lately been mentioned,† "as a circumstance not generally known, that he translated the Linnæan Genera, or Characters of Insects, into elegant Latin hexameters; some specimens of which have been preserved by his friends, though they were never intended for publication." Sir. J. Mackintosh very justly observes, in a letter which he addressed to the Bishop of Landaff:—"In the beautiful scenery of Bolton Abbey, where I have been since I began this note, I was struck by the recollection of a sort of merit of Gray, which is not generally observed—that he was the first discoverer of the beauties of nature in England, and has marked out the course of every picturesque journey that can be made in it."*

Botany, which he studied in early life, under the direction of his uncle, Mr. Antrobus, formed also the amusement and pursuit of his later years. He made frequent experiments on flowers, to mark the mode and progress of their vegetation. "For many of the latter years of his life (says Mr. Cole), Gray dedicated his hours to the study of Botany; in which he was eminently conspi-ings of shells, &c. Another copy of Linnæus, in the same library, included a few Ornithological papers in the handwriting of Gray, which I now possess; and which serve as an additional proof of the accuracy and minuteness with which he prosecuted that branch of his studies in natural history.—Since this note was originally written, extracts from these works have been published in the edition of Mr. Mathias. cuous. He had Linnæus's Works interleaved, always before him, when I have accidentally called upon him." His knowledge of architecture has been mentioned before. Mr. Mason says, that while Gray was abroad, he studied the Roman proportions both in ancient ruins, and in the works of Palladio. In his later years, he applied himself to Gothic and Saxon architecture, with such industry and sagacity, that he could, at first sight, pronounce on the precise time when any particular part of our cathedrals was erected. For this purpose he trusted less to written accounts and books, than to the internal evidence of the buildings themselves. He invented also several terms of art, the better to explain his meaning on this subject. Of heraldry, to which he applied as a preparatory science, he was a complete master, and left behind him many curious genealogical papers. "After what I have said of Gray, (I use the words of the Rev. Mr. Cole,) in respect to the beauty and elegance of his poetical compositions, it will hardly be believed, that he condescended to look into the study of antiquities. Yet he told me that he was deeply read in Dugdale, Hearne, Spelman, and others of that class; and that he took as much delight in that study, as ever he did in any other. Indeed, I myself saw many specimens of his industry in his collections from various manuscripts in the British Museum. His collections related chiefly to English history little known, or falsified by our historians, and some pedigrees.”* His taste in music was excellent, and formed on the study of the great Italian masters who flourished about the time of Pergolesi,† as Marcello, Leo, and Palestrina; he himself performed upon the harpsichord. And it is said that he sung to his own accompaniment on that instrument, with great taste, and feeling.‡ Vocal music, and that only, was what he chiefly regarded. Gray acquired also great facility and accuracy in the knowledge of painting. When he was in Italy, he drew up a paper containing several subjects proper for painting, which he had never seen executed: and affixed

* “You know how out of humour Gray has been about our diverting ourselves with pedigrees, which is at least, as wise as making a serious point of haranguing against the study * * Well, Gray has set himself to compute, and has found out that there must go a million of ancestors in twenty generations, to every body’s composition.” Walpole’s Lett. to G. Montagu, p. 70.

† Gray was not partial to the music of Handel: but Mr. Price (from whom I derive this information) adds, “that he used to speak with wonder of that Chorus in the Oratorio of Jephtha, beginning,—‘No more to Ammon’s God and King.’”—See ‘Essays on the Picturesque,’ vol. ii. p. 191, note; ed. 1794, and Cradock’s Memoirs, vol. i. p. 125. Mr. R. Nares says,—‘The Oratorio of the Messiah is as perfect a composition of the kind, as the faculties of human nature are capable of producing.’

the names* of different masters to each piece, to show which of their pencils he thought would be most proper to treat it. A curious List of Painters, from the Revival of the Art, to the Beginning of the last Century, was also formed by him, with great accuracy and attention. It was published for the first time, in Mr. Malone's edition of the Works of Sir Joshua Reynolds; † and has been lately reprinted among the collected productions of Mr. Mason. In his Anecdotes of Painting, H. Walpole owns himself much indebted to Gray, for information both in architecture and painting. ‡ “ He condescended to correct (he says) what he never would have condescended to write:” again “ I am come to put my Anecdotes of Painting into the Press. You are one of the few that I expect will be entertained with it. It has warmed Gray's coldness so much, that he is violent about it.” And to him was owing the discovery of a valuable artist in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, whose name was Theodore Haveus, for some time employed at Caius-College, || at Cam-

To the papers of Gray, the late Mr. Pennant owned himself much indebted for many corrections and observations on the antiquities of London.† Indeed, the variety and extreme ac-

This is undoubtedly Theodore Haveus himself, who, from all these circumstances, seems to have been an architect, sculptor, and painter; and having worked many years for Dr. Caius and the College, in gratitude left behind him his own picture 'Walpole's Anecdotes of Painting, p. 143, 4to.

* Raphael, Leonardo da Vinci, and Julio Romano were architects and I believe sculptors, as well as painters; but it was reserved for the genius of Michael Angelo, to add to the most profound knowledge of those arts, the mind and the expression of the poet. When Dr. Warton, in his Essay on Pope (vol. i. p. 157), said that he could not recollect any painters that were good poets, except Salvator Rosa, and Charles Vermander, of Mulbrac, in Flanders; he surely did not mean to except the poetry of this most extraordinary man. Pliny, in his Natural History, mentions the names of some ancient artists who were philosophers: see lib. xxxv. c. 10, 11.

I am never so angry as when I hear my acquaintance wishing they had been bred to some poking profession, or employed in some office of drudgery; as if it were pleasanter to be at the command of other people, than at one’s own; and as if they could not go, unless they were wound up: yet I know and feel what they mean by this complaint; it proves that some spirit, something of genius (more than common) is required to teach a man how to employ himself.

With regard to Classical learning, there seems every reason to suppose that he was a profound, as well as an elegant scholar. He thought once, it is said, of publishing an edition of Strabo, and left behind him many copious notes, and curious geographical disquisitions, particularly with respect to Persia, and India. He made a selection from the Anthologia Græca, inserting critical emendations and additional epigrams, besides a copious index.* On Plato (Mr. Mason says) he bestowed indefatigable pains; leaving a quantity of critical and explanatory notes on almost every part of his works. These notes have now been published † in the edition of Mr. Mathias, and they are fully sufficient to shew the respect and attention with which he studied the writings of that great philosopher. They relate chiefly to

* A Transcript of this work on the Anthologia by Mr. Mathias, was in the possession of Mr. Heber, at the sale of whose Library it was purchased by Mr. Pickering. There is very little original matter in it, consisting of a few translations in Latin verse: but the Selection of the Epigrammata is made with Gray's judgment and fine taste.

† Some notes on the Iων of Plato, by Thomas Gray, were published in the 'Musæi Oxoniensis Literarii Conspæctus,' Fasc. ii. p. 39—48; a publication which was conducted by the present Bishop of St. David's, and which consists of three numbers. antiquity and history ; whether he attended much to verbal criticism, either in the Greek or Latin language, does not appear. I should be inclined to think, that he read the ancient writers, not so much as a critic, but with the more extended, and ampler views of the historian, and the philosopher ; and all that was in any way connected with the fine arts, with the poetry, the philosophy, and the history of Greece and Rome, he studied with attention ; and some of the authors whom he perused, could only be relished by one, who possessed an intimate and copious knowledge of the language in which they wrote. How far Mr. Mathias may have consulted the reputation of Gray, in the extracts which he has lately made from the manuscripts at Pembroke, the voice of the public will decide. In the meanwhile, I cannot but observe, that so far as regards the observations on English metre, the remarks on Lydgate, the excellent, and highly entertaining analysis of the Aves of Aristophanes, and the English and Latin translations, there surely can be but one sentiment of approbation and gratitude. I confess, that if I had been placed in the situation of the editor, I should have hesitated most, as to the propriety of publishing the notes on Aristophanes, and the geographical disquisitions on India.

It is not, I believe, generally known, that Gray assisted Ross* (the editor of the Epistolæ Familiares of Cicero, with English notes) in an anonymous pamphlet† which he published against the Criticisms of Markland, on some of the Epistles, * See the Selections from the Gentleman's Magazine, vol. iv. p. 392. In the miscellaneous Tracts of Bowyer, 4to. are many letters of Markland, shewing great contempt for a person, whose name is not mentioned.—This was Ross. See p. 573, 574, 576, &c. The letters at p. 575, 518, dated June 20, 1749, and June 14th, 1756, which speak in severe terms of a book then published, relate, I believe, to Hurd's Horace.

and Orations of Cicero. Gray's own copy of Markland's Treatise is now before me. The notes which he has written in it, display a familiar knowledge of the structure of the Latin language, and answer some of the objections of that ingenious critic; who had not then learnt the caution, in verbal criticism and conjectural emendation, which he well knew how to value, when an editor of Euripides.*

* In 1741, Orator Tunstall (with some assistance from Markland) published his doubts of the authenticity of the letters between Cicero and Brutus (which Middleton had considered as genuine in his Life of Cicero), in a Latin Dissertation. This Middleton called, "a frivolous, captious, disingenuous piece of criticism;" answered it in English, and published the disputed epistles with a translation. Upon this, Orator Tunstall in 1744, published his 'Observations on the Epistles, representing several evident marks of forgery in them, in answer to the late pretences of the Rev. Dr. Conyers Middleton.' Markland, in 1745, published his arguments on the same side of the question, adding a Dissertation on four Orations ascribed to Cicero, viz. 1. Ad Quirites post reditum. 2. Post reditum in Senatu. 3. Pro Domo suâ, ad Pontifices. 4. De Haruspicum Responsis. This called forth the pamphlet from Ross, I believe, in the following year, but the book has no date. This controversy was continued by a 'Dissertation, in which the Observations of a late Pamphlet on the Writings of the Ancients, after the Manner of Mr. Markland, are clearly answered; those Passages in Tully corrected, on which some of the Objections are founded; with Amendments of a few Pieces of Criticism in Mr. Markland's Epistola Critica. London, 1746, 8vo.' Gesner published some Strictures on Markland in the Comm. Acad. Reg. Götting. t. iii. 223—284: which Wolf wonders Markland did not answer; as he had blown his pipes

In the Latin poems of Gray,* some errors have been pointed out in the notes. One or two of them are evidently mistakes arising from haste; and the others do not at all derogate from the reputation which he has acquired for his classical attainments, and the elegance and purity of his compositions. Salmasius discovered some mistakes in quantity, among the poems of Milton, when they first appeared; and Vavassor† detected many inaccuracies in metre and grammar, in the poetical volume published by Beza. The Latin poems of Buchanan, beautiful and classical as they are in their spirit and language, are not without defects both of grammar and of prosody. Indeed some faults‡ of this kind are certainly not inexcusable, louder than Tunstall. Saxius mistakes Ross's pamphlet for a serious one. and says that he attacks Cicero's Oration pro Sulla "Harduininâ pæne licentiâ."

* In the Gentleman's Magazine, 1801, vol. lxxi. p. 591, is a letter from a Mr. Edmund C. Mason, Sheffield, relating an anecdote of Gray, and containing a Latin poem, which he says, is the production of the poet; and a Greek translation of it, by West. This gentleman, however, has not given any account of the authenticity of his manuscript.

† See Scaligeriana; art: Barclay and Beza. See Irvine's Lives of the Scottish Poets, v. i. p. 164.

‡ Mr. Mason says, "A learned and ingenious person, to whom I communicated the Latin poems after they were printed off, was of opinion that they contain some few expressions not warranted by any good authority; and that there are one or two false quantities to be found in them. I had once an intention to cancel the pages, and correct the passages objected to, according to my friend's when composing in a language not our own. Gray's Latin poetry, however, appears to me to be peculiarly forcible and correct; and formed attentively after the best models—Virgil and Lucretius. Dr. Johnson, who was a good judge of the purity of Latin composition (although he did not always himself compose with that classical exactness which may be desired), allowed, “that it were reasonable to wish Gray had prosecuted his design of excelling in Latin poetry; for though there is at present some embarrassment in his phrase, and some harshness in his lyric numbers, his copiousness of language is such as very few possess; and his lines, even when imperfect, discover a writer whom practice would have made skilful.” If Gray, however, should need any further defence, it must be observed, that his Latin poems were never intended by him for publication, if we except the two that he wrote at College; that they were found by his executors among his own papers, or those of his friends, and that they did not receive his last corrections.*

criticisms; but, on second thoughts, I deemed it best to let them stand exactly as I found them in the manuscripts. The accurate classical reader will perhaps be best pleased with finding out the faulty passages himself; and his candour will easily make the proper allowances for any little mistakes in verses, which, he will consider, never had the author's last hand.” Memoirs, vol. iv. p. 234.

* The ode written at the Grande Chartreuse perhaps ought also to be excepted.

I have never understood that his knowledge of modern languages extended beyond the French and Italian: these, however, he studied when he was abroad with considerable diligence, and cultivated afterwards, in the leisure which he enjoyed at home. Indeed his acquaintance with the beautiful works of the Tuscan bards, has contributed in no small degree, to enrich and adorn many passages of his English poetry:

“ Dum vagus, Ausonias nunc per umbras,
Nunc Britannica per vireta lusit.”

It remains now only to speak of an intended publication in English literature, mentioned by Gray in an advertisement to the Imitation of the Welsh Odes, and which was an ‘History of English Poetry.’ It appears that Warburton had communicated to Mason a paper of Pope’s, containing the first sketch of a plan for a work of that nature, and which was printed in the Life of Pope by Ruffhead, and subsequently in many other works.

“Milton (says Dryden in the preface to his Fables) was the poetical son of Spenser, and Mr. Waller of Fairfax; for we have our lineal descents and clans as well as other families.” Upon this principle, Pope* drew up his little catalogue of the English poets;* and Gray was so much pleased with the method of arrangement which Pope had struck out, that on Mr. Mason's agreeing to assist him, he examined and considerably enlarged the plan. He meant in the introduction, to ascertain the Origin of Rhyme; to give specimens of the Provençal Scaldic, British, and others. Carew (a bad Waller), Waller himself and Lord Lansdown are all of one school; as Sir John Suckling, Sir John Minnes, and Prior are of another. Crashaw is a coarse sort of Cowley; he was a follower too of Petrarch and Marino, but most of Marino. He and Cowley were good friends; and the latter has a good copy of verses on his death. About this pitch were Stanley (the author of the Opinions of Philosophers); Randolph, though rather superior; and Sylvester, though rather of a lower form. Cartwright and Bishop Corbet are of this class of poets; and Ruggle, the author of Counter-Scuffle, might be admitted among them. Herbert is lower than Crashaw, Sir John Beaumont higher, and Donne a good deal so." [Spence's Anecdotes, quoted in] Malone's Dryden, vol. iv. p. 589.

* I have placed Pope's Catalogue of the Poets in the Appendix D. (with Gray's Letter on the same subject), with some observations upon it. It is singular that this sketch of Pope's should have been so often printed, without any of the editors, except Mr. Malone, pointing out its mistakes and inaccuracies. It disagrees also, in many points, with the account which he gave to Spence; printed in the preceding note. I must observe, that this catalogue is printed by Mr. Mathias, in a far more correct manner, than that in which it usually appears. It is published by him from Gray's own hand-writing; and many of the inaccuracies pointed out by Mr. Malone, are only the blunders of printers and transcribers.

Saxon poetry : and when the different sources of English poetry were ascertained, the history was to commence with the school of Chaucer. Mr. Mason collected but few materials for this purpose ; but Gray, besides writing his imitations of Norse and Welsh poetry, made many curious and elaborate disquisitions into the origin of rhyme, and the variety of metre to be found in the ancient poets. He transcribed many passages from Lidgate, from the manuscripts which he found at Cambridge, remarking the beauties and defects of this immediate scholar of Chaucer.*

About this time, however, T. Warton was engaged in a work of the same nature : and Gray, fatigued with the extent of his plan, relinquished his undertaking, and sent a copy of his design to Warton ; of whose abilities, from his observations, on Spenser, Mr. Mason says, he entertained a high opinion. It is well known, that Warton did not adopt this plan ; and gave his reasons for his departure from it, in the preface to his history. Gray died some years before Warton's publication appeared ;† but Mr. Mason mentions it with praise, in a note in the fourth volume of his Memoirs of Gray, where he calls it, “ a work, which, as the author proceeds in it through more enlightened periods, will undoubtedly give the world as high an idea of his critical taste, as the present specimen does of his indefatigable researches into antiquity.”

Sir James Mackintosh has given a sketch of Gray's poetical character with his usual temperance of judgment, and delicacy of taste, which may with propriety be introduced, as our narrative is drawing to a close. ‘Gray (he writes, after some observations on the merits of Goldsmith), was a Poet of a far higher order, and of an almost opposite kind of merit. Of all English Poets he was the most finished artist. He attained the highest degree of splendour of which poetical style seems to be capable. If Virgil and his scholar Racine may be allowed to have united somewhat more ease with their elegance, no other poet approaches Gray in this kind of excellence. The degree of poetical invention diffused over such a style, the balance of taste and of fancy necessary to produce it, and the art with which the offensive boldness of imagery is polished away, are not indeed always perceptible to the common reader, nor do they convey to any mind the same species of gratification, which is felt from the perusal of those poems, which seem to be the unpremeditated effusions of enthusiasm. But to the eye of the critic, and more especially to the artist, they afford a new kind of pleasure, not incompatible with a distinct perception of the art employed, and somewhat similar to the grand emotions excited by the reflection on the skill and toil exerted in the construction of a magnificent palace. They can only be classed among the secondary pleasures of poetry, but they never can exist without a great degree of its higher excellencies. Almost all his poetry was lyrical—that species which, issuing from a mind in the highest state of excitement, requires an intensity of feeling which, for a long composition, the genius of no poet could support. Those who complained of its brevity and rapidity, only confessed their own inability to follow the movements of poetical inspiration.* Of the two grand attributes of the Ode, Dryden had displayed the enthusiasm, Gray exhibited the magnificence. He is also the only modern English writer whose Latin verses deserve general notice, but we must lament that such difficult trifles had diverted its genius from its natural objects. In his Letters he has shewn the descriptive powers of a poet, and in new combinations of generally familiar words, which he seems to have caught from Madame de Sevigné, (though it must be said he was somewhat quaint) he was eminently happy. It may be added, that he deserves the comparatively trifling praise of having been the most learned poet* since Milton."†

In the short, and I am afraid, imperfect account which I have now given of the life and character of Gray, I may be permitted, before I close the narrative, to express my own sincere admiration of that splendid genius, that exquisite taste, that profound and extensive erudition, those numerous accomplishments, and those real and unassuming merits, which will preserve for him a very eminent reputation, exclusively of that, which he so justly enjoys in his rank among the English poets. His life, indeed, did not abound with change of incident, or variety of situation; it was not blessed with the happiness of domestic endearments, nor spent in the bosom of social intercourse; but it

* Gray and Mason first detected the imposition of Chatterton. See Archæological Epistle to Dean Milles, Stanza xi. It appears that Gray did not admire Hudibras. "Mr. Gray," says Warburton, "has certainly a true taste. I should have read Hudibras with as much indifference as perhaps he did, were it not for a fondness of the transactions of those times, against which it is a satire."—Warburton's Letters, xxxi. p. 290. He appears highly to have praised some of W. Whitehead's poems. See Mason's Life of Whitehead, p. 40, &c., and he approved H. Walpole's Tragedy of the Mysterious Mother. See Lett. to G. Montagu, p. 406, was constantly and contentedly employed in the improvement of the various talents with which he was so highly gifted; in a sedulous cultivation both of the moral and intellectual powers; in the study of wisdom, and in the practice of virtue.

To present his poetry to the public, more correctly than it has yet appeared, has been the design of this edition. And I am willing to hope, that I have made no unacceptable present to the literary world, in enabling them for the first time to read the genuine correspondence of Gray, in an enlarged as well as authentic form. Assuredly, to some, his letters will not be less interesting than his poetry;* and they will be read by all who are desirous of estimating, not only the variety of his learning, and the richness and playfulness of his fancy, but the excellence of his private character, the genuine goodness of his heart, his sound and serious views of life, and his warm and zealous affection towards his friends.

* 'I have been reading Gray's Works,' says Cowper, 'and think him sublime.....I once thought Swift's Letters the best that could be written, but I like Gray's better. His humour, or his wit, or whatever it is to be called, is never illnated or offensive, and yet I think equally poignant with the Dean's.' Hayley's Ed. 4to. vol. ii. p. 231.

APPENDIX A.

THE LAST WILL AND TESTAMENT OF THOMAS GRAY.

Extracted from the Registry of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury.

IN the Name of God. Amen. I Thomas Gray of Pembroke-Hall in the University of Cambridge, being of sound mind and in good health of body, yet ignorant how long these blessings may be indulged me, do make this my Last Will and Testament in manner and form following. First, I do desire that my body may be deposited in the vault, made by my late dear mother in the churchyard of Stoke-Pogeis, near Slough in Buckinghamshire, by her remains, in a coffin of seasoned oak, neither lined nor covered, and (unless it be very inconvenient) I could wish that one of my executors may see me laid in the grave, and distribute among such honest and industrious poor persons in the said parish as he thinks fit, the sum of ten pounds in charity.—Next, I give to George Williamson, esq. my second cousin by the father's side, now of Calcutta in Bengal the sum of five hundred pounds reduced Bank annuities, now standing in my name. I give to Anna Lady Goring, also my second cousin by the father's side, of the county of Sussex, five hundred pounds reduced Bank annuities, and a pair of large blue and white old Japan china jars. Item, I give to Mary Antrobus of Cambridge, spinster, my second cousin by the mother's side, all that my freehold estate and house in the parish of St. Michael, Cornhill, London, now let at the yearly rent of sixty-five pounds, and in the occupation of Mr. Nortgeth perfumer, provided that she pay, out of the said rent, by half-yearly payments, Mrs. Jane Olliffe, my aunt, of Cambridge, widow, the sum of twenty pounds per annum during her natural life; and after the decease of the said Jane Olliffe I give the said estate to the said Mary Antrobus, to have and to hold to her heirs and assigns for ever. Further; I bequeath to the said Mary Antrobus the sum of six hundred pounds new South-sea annuities, now standing in the joint names of Jane Olliffe and Thomas Gray, but charged with the payment of five pounds per annum to Graves Stokely of Stoke-Pogeis, in the county of Bucks, which sum of six hundred pounds, after the decease of the said annuitant, does (by the will of Anna Rogers my late aunt) belong solely and entirely to me, together with all overplus of interest in the mean-time accruing. Further, if at the time of my decease there shall be any arrear of salary due to me from his Majesty's Treasury, I give all such arrears to the said Mary Antrobus. Item, I give to Mrs. Dorothy Comyns of Cambridge, my other second cousin by the mother's side, the sums of six hundred pounds old South-sea annuities, of three hundred pounds four per cent. Bank annuities consolidated, and of two hundred pounds three per cent. Bank annuities consolidated, all now standing in my name. I give to Richard Stonehewer, esq. one of his Majesty's Commissioners of Excise, the sum of five hundred pounds reduced Bank annuities, and I beg his acceptance of one of my diamond rings. I give to Dr. Thomas Wharton, of Old Park in the Bishoprick of Durham, five hundred pounds reduced Bank annuities, and desire him also to accept of one of my diamond rings. I give to my servant, Stephen Hempstead, the sum of fifty pounds reduced Bank annuities, and if he continues in my service to the time of my death I also give him all my wearing-apparel and linen. I give to my two cousins above-mentioned, Mary Antrobus and Dorothy Comyns, all my plate, watches, rings, china-ware, bed-linen and table-linen, and the furniture of my chambers, at Cambridge, not otherwise bequeathed, to be equally and amicably shared between them. I give to the Reverend William Mason, precentor of York, all my books, manuscripts, coins, music printed or written, and papers of all kinds, to preserve or destroy at his own discretion. And after my just debts and the expenses of my funeral are discharged, all the residue of my personal estate, whatsoever, I do hereby give and bequeath to the said Reverend William Mason, and to the Reverend Mr. James Browne, President of Pembroke-

Hall, Cambridge, to be equally divided between them, desiring them to apply the sum of two hundred pounds to an use of charity concerning which I have already informed them. And I do hereby constitute and appoint them, the said William Mason and James Browne, to be joint executors of this my Last Will and Testament. And if any relation of mine, or other legatee, shall go about to molest or commence any suit against my said executors in the execution of their office, I do, as far as the law will permit me, hereby revoke and make void all such bequests or legacies as I had given to that person or persons, and give it to be divided between my said executors and residuary legatees, whose integrity and kindness I have so long experienced, and who can best judge of my true intention and meaning. In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this 2d day of July, 1770.

THO. GRAY.

Signed, sealed, published, and declared by the said Thomas Gray, the testator, as and for his Last Will and Testament, in the presence of us, who in his presence and at his request, and in the presence of each other, have signed our names as witnesses hereto.

* Mr. Gray used to go with his friend Browne to a reading-room in the evening. Browne, who was a very punctual man, just before the hour of going, used to get up, walk about the room, and make a bustle with his gown, &c. "Now," says Gray, "Browne is going to strike."

APPENDIX B.

THE following curious paper I owe to the kindness of Sir Egerton Brydges and his friend Mr. Haslewood. It was discovered in a volume of manuscript law cases, purchased by the latter gentleman at the sale of the late Isaac Reed's books. It is a case submitted by the mother of Gray to the opinion of an eminent civilian in 1735; and it proves, that to the great and single exertions of this admirable woman, Gray was indebted for his education, and consequently for the happiness of his life. The sorrow and the mournful affection with which he dwelt on his mother's memory, serves to shew the deep sense he retained of what she suffered, as well as what she did for him. Those who have read the Memoirs of Kirke White in Mr. Southey's Narrative, will recognise the similarity of the situation in which the two poets were placed, in their entrance into life; and they will see, that if maternal love and courage had not stepped in, in both cases, their genius and talents would have been lost in the ignorance, or stifled by the selfishness, of those about them.

CASE.

“ Philip Gray, before his marriage with his wife, (then Dorothy Antrobus, and who was then partner with her sister Mary Antrobus,) entered into articles of agreement with the said Dorothy, and Mary, and their brother Robert Antrobus, that the said Dorothy's stock in trade (which was then 240*l.*) should be employed by the said Mary in the said trade, and that the same, and all profits arising thereby, should be for the sole benefit of the said Dorothy, notwithstanding her intended coverture, and her sole receipts alone a sufficient discharge to the said Mary and her brother Robert Antrobus, who was made trustee. But in case either the said Philip or Dorothy dies, then the same to be assigned to the survivor.

“ That in pursuance of the said articles, the said Mary, with the assistance of the said Dorothy her sister, hath carried on the said trade for near thirty years, with tolerable success for the said Dorothy. That she hath been no charge to the said Philip ; and during all the said time, hath not only found herself in all manner of apparel, but also for all her children, to the number of twelve, and most of the furniture of his house ; and paying 40*l.* a year for his shop, almost providing every thing for her son, whilst at Eton school, and now he is at Peter-House at Cambridge.

“ Notwithstanding which, almost ever since he hath been married, he hath used her in the most inhuman manner, by beating, kicking, punching, and with the most vile and abusive language ; that she hath been in the utmost fear and danger of her life, and hath been obliged this last year to quit her bed, and lie with her sister. This she was resolved, if possible, to bear ; not to leave her shop of trade for the sake of her son, to be able to assist in the maintenance of him at the University, since his father won't.

“ There is no cause for this usage, unless it be an unhappy jealousy of all mankind in general (her own brother not excepted) ; but no woman deserves, or hath maintained, a more virtuous character : or it is presumed if he can make her sister leave off trade, he thinks he can then come into his wife's money, but the articles are too secure for his vile purposes.

“ He daily threatens he will pursue her with all the vengeance possible, and will ruin himself to undo her, and his only son ; in order to which he hath given warning to her sister to quit his shop, where they have carried on their trade so successfully, which will be almost their ruin : but he insists she shall go at Midsummer next ; and the said Dorothy, his wife, in necessity must be forced to go along with her, to some other house and shop, to be assisting to her said sister, in the said trade, for her own and son's support.

“ But if she can be quiet, she neither expects or desires any help from him : but he is really so very vile in his nature, she hath all the reason to expect most troublesome usage from him that can be thought of.

QUESTION.

“ What he can, or possibly may do to molest his wife in living with her sister, and assisting in her trade, for the purposes in the said articles ; and which will be the best way for her to conduct herself in this unhappy circumstance, if he should any ways be troublesome, or endeavour to force her to live with him? And whether the said Dorothy in the lifetime of the said Philip, may not by will, or otherwise, dispose of the interest, or produce, which hath, or may arise, or become due for the said stock as she shall think fit, it being apprehended as part of her separate estate?"

ANSWER.

"If Mrs. Gray should leave her husband's house, and go to live with her sister in any other, to assist her in her trade, her husband may, and probably will call her, by process in the Ecclesiastical Court, to return home and cohabit with him, which the court will compel her to do, unless she can shew cause to the contrary. She has no other defence in that case, than to make proof, before the court, of such cruelties as may induce the judge to think she cannot live in safety with her husband: then the court will decree for a separation.

"This is a most unhappy case, and such a one, as I think, if possible, should be referred to, and made up by some common friend; sentences of separation, by reason of cruelty only, being very rarely obtained.

"What the cruelties are which he has used towards her, and what proof she is able to make of them, I am yet a stranger to. She will, as she has hitherto done, bear what she reasonably can, without giving him any provocation to use her ill. If, nevertheless, he forces her out of doors, the most reputable place she can be in, is with her sister. If he will proceed to extremities, and go to law, she will be justified, if she stands upon her defence, rather perhaps than if she was plaintiff in the cause.

"As no power of making a will is reserved to Mrs. Gray, by her marriage settlement, and not only the original stock, but likewise the produce and interest which shall accrue, and be added to it, are settled upon the husband, if he survives his wife; it is my opinion she has no power to dispose of it by will, or otherwise.

APPENDIX C.

Miscellaneous Extracts from the Manuscript Papers of the Rev. William Cole, of Milton in Cambridgeshire, relating to Gray; now in the British Museum.

I.

On Tuesday July 30th, 1771, Mr. Essex calling on me, in his way to Ely, told me that Mr. Gray was thought to be dying of the gout in his stomach. I had not heard before that he was ill, though he had been so for many days. So I sent my servant in the evening to Pembroke-Hall, to enquire after his welfare; but he was then going off, and no message could be delivered; and he died that night. He desired to be buried early in the morning at Stoke-Pogeis;* and accordingly was put in lead, and conveyed from Cambridge on Sunday morning, with a design to rest at Hoddesdon the first night, and Salt-hill on Monday night, from whence he might be very early on Tuesday morning at Stoke. He made the master of Pembroke (his particular friend) his executor; who, with his neice Antrobus, Mr. Cummins a merchant of Cambridge, who had married her sister, and a young gentleman of Christ's-College with whom he was very intimate, went in a mourning-coach after the hearse, to see him put into his grave. He left all his books and MSS. to his particular friend Mr. Mason, with a desire that he would do with the latter what he thought proper. When he saw all was over with him, he sent an express to his friend Mr. Stonehewer, who immediately came to see him; and as Dr. Gisborne hap-

* Gray's tomb is at the end of the chancel, of Stoke-Pogeis church. At Strawberry-Hill there is a drawing by Bacon of Gray's tomb, by moonlight; given to Lord Orford, by Sir Edward Walpole. pened to be with him when the messenger came, he brought him down to Cambridge with him; which was the more lucky, as Professor Plumptre * had refused to get up, being sent to in the night. But it was too late to do any good: and indeed he had all the assistance of the faculty† besides at Cambridge. It is said, that he has left all his fortune to his two nieces at Cambridge; and just before his death, about a month, or thereabout, he had done a very generous action, for which he was much commended.

His aunt Olliffe, an old gentlewoman of Norfolk, had left that county, two or three years, to come and live at Cambridge; and dying about the time I speak of, left him and Mr. Cummins executors and residuary legatees; but Mr. Gray generously gave up his part to his nieces, one of whom Mrs. Olliffe had taken no notice of, and who wanted it sufficiently. * * * * I was told by Mr. Alderman Burleigh, the present mayor of Cambridge, that Mr. Gray's father had been an Exchange-broker, but the fortune he had acquired of about 10,000*l.* was greatly hurt by the fire in Cornhill; so that Mr. Gray, many years ago, sunk a good part of what was left and purchased an annuity, in order to have a fuller income. I have often seen at his chambers, in his ink-stand, a neat pyramidal bloodstone seal, with these arms at the base, viz.‡ a lion rampant, within a bordure engrailed, being those of the name of Gray, and belonged, as he told me, to his father. His mother was in the millinery way of business. His person was small, well put together, and latterly tending to plumpness. He was all his life remarkably sober and temperate. I think, I heard him say he never was across a horse's back in his life. He gave me a small print or etching of himself by Mr. Mason, which is extremely like him.

* Dr. Plumptre certainly refused to get up to attend Gray in his last illness; but it was to be considered, that he was grown old, and had found it necessary to adopt this rule with all his patients. ED.

† Dr. Glynn was Gray's physician at Cambridge, and likewise a very intimate friend. ED.

‡ Sir Egerton Brydges informs me, that Gray's arms are the same as those of Lord Gray of Scotland; who claimed a relationship with him, (see Mason's Memoirs, vol. iv. lett. 55.) and as the present Earl Grey's.

II.

I am apt to think the characters of Voiture and Mr. Gray were very similar. They were both little men, very nice and exact in their persons and dress, most lively and agreeable in conversation, except that Mr. Gray was apt to be too satirical, and both of them full of affectation. In Gil Blas, the print of Scipio in the arbour, beginning to tell his own adventures to Gil Blas, Antonio, and Beatrix, was so like the countenance of Mr. Gray, that if he sat for it, it could not be more so. It is in a 12mo edition in four volumes, printed at Amsterdam, chez Herman Vytwerf, 1735, in the 4th volume, p. 94.—p. m. It is ten times more like him than his print before Mason's life of him, which is horrible, and makes him a fury. That little one done by Mr. Mason is like him; and placid Mr. Tyson spoilt the other by altering it.

III.

It must have been about the year 1770, that Dr. Farmer and Mr. Gray ever met, to be acquainted together, as about that time I met them at Mr. Oldham's chambers, in Peter-House, to dinner. Before, they had been shy of each other: and though Mr. Farmer was then esteemed one of the most ingenious men in the University, yet Mr. Gray's singular niceness in the choice of his acquaintance made him appear fastidious to a great degree, to all who were not acquainted with his manner. Indeed, there did not seem to be any probability of any great intimacy from the style and manner of each of them. The one a cheerful, companionable, hearty, open, downright man, of no great regard to dress or common forms of behaviour: the other, of a most fastidious and recluse distance of carriage, rather averse to sociability, but of the graver turn; nice, and elegant in his person, dress, and behaviour, even to a degree of finicalness and effeminacy. So that nothing but their extensive learning and abilities could ever have coalesced two such different men, and both of great value in their own line and walk. They were ever after great friends; and Dr. Farmer, and all of his acquaintance, had soon after too much reason to lament his loss, and the shortness of their acquaintance.

From the Information of Sir Egerton Brydges, K. J. M. P.

Among the friends of Gray, was the Rev. William Robinson, (third brother of Mrs. Montagu,) of Denton Court, near Canterbury, and rector of Burfield, Berks. He was educated at Westminster, and at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he formed a particular intimacy with Gray, who twice* visited him at Denton. He died Dec. 1803, aged about seventy-five. Mr. Robinson was an admirable classical scholar, to whose taste Gray paid great deference. He did not consider Mr. Mason as equal to the task of writing Gray's Life; and on that account when Mason (from his knowledge of Mr. R.'s intimacy with Gray) communicated his intention to him, Mr. Robinson declined returning him an answer, which produced a coolness between them which was never afterwards made up. Mr. Robinson, however, owned that Mason had executed his task better than he had expected. The 'Lines on Lord Holland's House at Kingsgate,' were written when on a visit to Mr. Robinson, and found in the drawer of Gray's dressing table after he was gone. They were restored to him; for he had no other copy, and had forgotten them. What was the real ground of the quarrel between Gray and Walpole when abroad, I do not know; but have reason to believe that it was of too deep a nature ever to be eradicated from Gray's bosom; which I gather from certain expressions half dropped to Mr. Robinson. Mr. R. thought Gray not only a great poet, but an exemplary, amiable, and virtuous man. Gray's poem on 'Lord Holland' first appeared in the Gentleman's Magazine, vol. xlvii. p. 624, and vol. xlviii. p. 88; that on 'Jemmy Twitcher,' in vol. lii. p. 39.

When he went to court to kiss the king's hand † for his place, he felt a mixture of shyness and pride, which he expressed to one of his intimate friends in terms of strong ill-humour.

VI.

The pleasantest morning that I passed at Cambridge, was in company with Mr. Gray, and some critics, at the rehearsal of the music for his ode, previous to its grand performance at the Senate House: and I thought that as he had so many directions to give, and such nice distinctions to make, it was as well he had to deal with the pliant Dr. Randall, rather than with some of the able composers in the metropolis. Mr. Gray was not at that time much more comfortable than the Chancellor himself; for the press was teeming with abuse, and a very satirical parody was then preparing, which soon afterwards appeared. His own delicious ode must always be admired, yet this envenomed shaft was so pointedly levelled at him, though he affected in his letter to Mason to disregard it, that with his fine feelings he was not only annoyed, but very seriously hurt by it." v. Cradock's Mem. p. 107-8.

From time to time I had treasured up many bon-mots of Gray communicated by Mr. Tyson, and by the former fellow-collegian of Gray, the Rev. Mr. Sparrow, of Walthamstow, who was always attentive to his witty effusions. Some few of these have been printed incorrectly, and freely bestowed on others in the Johnsoniana. Johnson was highly displeased, that any should be attributed to him, as mentioned by Mr. Davies. When he was publishing his life of Gray, I gave him several anecdotes, but he was very anxious as soon as possible to get to the end of his labours. Not long since I received a very kind message from the Rev. Mr. Bright, Skeffington Hall, Leicestershire, to inform me that he had wished to deposit with me all the remaining documents and papers of Gray, as bequeathed to him by Mr. Stonehewer, but that he found that they all had been carried off to Rome inadvertently by a learned Editor. If recovered they should certainly be consigned to me.—Id. p. 1834.

Memorabilia—from Mr. Bray's notes. See Mrs. Bray's Description of Devonshire, in letters to R. Southey, esq., vol. iii. p. 311.

Jan. 27, 1807. In a conversation which I had with Mr. Mathias on Italian literature, he informed me that Gray, though so great a poet himself, and an admirer of the poets of Italy, was unacquainted with the works of Guidi, Menzini, Filicaja, &c., and indeed of almost all, that are contained in his 'Componimenti Lirici.' He had once in his possession the commonplace book of Gray, and it contained very copious extracts from the Commentary of Crescembini. He told me that he could gratify me with a sight of Gray's hand writing, and fetched from his library a fac-simile, being a kind of commentary in English on Pindar and Aristophanes. It was written remarkably neat and plain, but rather stiff, and bearing evident marks of being written slowly. It had a great resemblance to the Italian mode of writing, every part of the letters being nearly of an equal thickness. He wrote always with a crow-quill.

Observing no obliterations or erasures, and indeed only one or two interlineations; I remarked that it must have been a fair copy, and wondered how he could have taken so much pains, unless he had intended it for publication. But Mr. Mathias assured me, that Gray was so averse to publication, that had not a surreptitious copy of his 'Elegy in a Country Church-yard' appeared, he never would have published it; and even when he did, it was without his name. The reason that he was so correct, was that he never committed any thing to paper till he had most maturely considered it before hand.

Mr. Mathias explained to me how he was so well acquainted with these particulars respecting Gray, by informing me that he was most intimate with Mr. Nichols, the familiar friend and executor of Gray, who had lent him the MSS. On my lamenting that they were never made public, he said that it was not for want of his most earnest solicitation, but that Mr. Nichols was an old man, and wished even to conceal that he was in possession of any such precious reliques, lest he should be plagued with requests to have them copied, or at least to shew them. He therefore in a manner enjoined me to secrecy, and I consequently commit the pleasant memoranda to paper, merely for my own satisfaction, that, on occasional inspection, the pleasure I received from this conversation may be more firmly brought to my recollection. For the same reason, and as these MSS. are never likely to be made public, I shall enter more at large upon the consideration of them; at least as much as a cursory inspection during a morning call would permit.

As Gray always affixed the date to everything he wrote, which, as Mr. Mathias assured me, was the custom of Petrarch, it seems that he wrote his remarks on Pindar at rather an early age. I think the date was 1747. It is very closely written: the Greek characters are remarkably neat. He begins with the date of the composition, and takes into his consideration almost every thing connected with it, both chronologically and historically. The notes of the Scholiasts do not escape him, and he is so minute as to direct his attention to almost every expression. He appears to have reconciled many apparent incongruities, and to have elucidated many difficulties. I the more lament these valuable annotations remain unpublished, as they would prove that in the opinion of so great a man, the English language is in every respect adequate to express everything that criticism the most erudite can require. It presented to my eye a most gratifying novelty, to see the union of Greek and English, and to find that they harmonized together as well as Greek and Latin.

The remarks on the plays of Aristophanes were so minute, not only expressing where they were written and acted, but when they were revived; that as Mr. Mathias justly observed, 'one would think he was reading the account of some modern comedy, instead of the dramatic composition of about two thousand years old.' Gray also left behind him very copious remarks upon Plato, which had also formerly been in Mr. Mathias's hands, likewise large collections respecting the customs of the ancients, &c. And so multifarious and minute were his investigations, that he directed his attention even to the Supellex, or household furniture of the ancients, collecting together all the passages of the classics that had any reference to the subject.

Mr. Mathias shewed me likewise many sheets copied by Gray from some Italian author; also, I believe, an historical composition, and a great many genealogies, of which Gray was particularly fond. On my remarking that I wished Gray had written less genealogies and more poetry, he informed me that the reason he had written so little poetry, was from the great exertion it cost him, (while he made no reserve in composing) in the labour of composition. Mr. Mathias informed me that he had seen the original copy of Gray's 'Ode on the Progress of Poetry!' that there were not so many alterations as he expected; which was evidently owing to his method of long previous meditation, and that some of the lines were written three or four times over; and then, what is not always the case with an author, the best is always adopted.

He said there was nothing of which Gray had not the profoundest knowledge, at least of such subjects as come under the denomination of learning, except mathematics, of which, as well as his friend Mason, he was as completely ignorant, and which he used frequently to lament. He was acquainted with botany, but hardly seems to have paid it the compliment it deserves, when he said he learnt it merely for the sake of sparing himself the trouble of thinking.'

{ Fairfax, } }

{ Sir John Mennis, } Originals of Hudibras.
{ Tho. Baynal, } }

Here are several mistakes. The first paragraph under Æra II. viz. "Spenser, Col. Clout, from the School of Ariosto, and Petrarch, translated from Tasso," is unintelligible. We have no English poem by Alabaster. Golding, I believe, translated nothing from the Italian. Sir John Davies and Drayton wrote nearly as soon as Donne. Carew, and T. Carey, are the same persons; and Thomas Carew, the person meant, had published nothing when Waller wrote his first poem. There is no poet of the name of Baynal. The person meant, I suspect, was Tho. Randal, in which way the name of Randolph the poet was often written in the last century; and Pope might not have known that Randolph, whom he mentioned before, and Tho. Randal, were the same person. [Malone.]*

To these observations by Mr. Malone, I shall add, that there does not seem to be any just ground for placing Chaucer in the school of Provence. Mr. Tyrwhitt says, "As to Chaucer's language, I have not observed, in any of his writings, a single phrase or word, which has the least appearance of having been fetched by him from the south of the Loire. With respect to the manner and matter of his compositions, till some clear instance of imitation be produced, I shall be slow to believe, that in either he ever copied the poets of Provence, with whose works, I apprehend, he had very little, if any, acquaintance." [Cant. Tales, pref. p. xxxv.] Even T. Warton, in his Emendations and Additions to his second volume [p. 458], says: "I have never affirmed that Chaucer imitated the Provençal bards; although it is by no means improbable that he might have known their tales." Secondly, Davenant and Drayton can never be placed in the school of Donne.†

† Perhaps Pope alluded to Suckling's verses to Davenant:—

Shall not account unto the age's crimes
Death of fierce Wit. Since the great Lord of it
DONNE parted hence: no man has ever writ
So near him, in his own way.—

Drayton should be ranked with Spenser; where indeed Pope, in his conversation with Spence, placed him: and Davenant is a poet who approaches nearer to Shakspeare, in the beauty of his descriptions, the tenderness of his thoughts, the seriousness of his feeling, and the wildness of his fancy. Cartwright did not imitate Donne:* and Cleveland is a writer of a very peculiar style, which he formed for himself. "The obtrusion of new words on his hearers (says Dryden) is what the world has blamed in our satirist Cleveland. To express a thing hard, and unnaturally, is his new way of elocution. There is this difference between his Satires and Donne's, that the one gives us deep thoughts in common language, through rough cadence; the other gives us common thoughts in abstruse words." Essay on Dramatic Poesy, p. 63, 64. Sir,

Our friend, Dr. Hurd, having long ago desired me, in your name to communicate any fragments or sketches of a design, I once had, to give a History of English Poetry,† you may well think me rude or negligent, when you see me hesitating for so many months, before I comply with your request, and yet, believe me, few of your friends have been better pleased than I, to find this subject, (surely neither unentertaining, nor unuseful,) had fallen into hands so likely to do it justice. Few have felt a higher esteem for your talents, your taste, and industry. In truth, the only cause of my delay, has been a sort of diffidence, that would not let me send you anything, so short, so slight, and so imperfect as the few materials I had begun to collect, or the observa-

INTRODUCTION.

On the Poetry of the Gallic or Celtic nations, as far back as it can be traced. On that of the Goths, its introduction into these islands by the Saxons and Danes, and its duration. On the origin of rhyme among the Franks, the Saxons, and Provençaux. Some account of the Latin rhyming poetry, from its early origin, down to the fifteenth century.

PART I.

On the School of Provence, which rose about the year 1100, and was soon followed by the French and Italians. Their heroic poetry, or romances in verse, allegories, fabliaux, syrviertes, comedies, farces, canzoni, sonnetts, ballades, madrigals, sestines, &c. Of their imitators, the French; and of the first Italian School, commonly called the Sicilian, about the year 1200, brought to perfection by Dante, Petrarch, Boccace, and others. State of poetry in England from the Conquest, 1066, or rather from Henry the Second's time, 1154, to the reign of Edward the Third, 1327.

PART II.

On Chaucer, who first introduced the manner of the Provençaux, improved by the Italians into our country. His character, and merits at large. The different kinds in which he excelled. Gower, Occleve, Lydgate, Hawes, Gawen Douglas, Lyndesay, Bellenden, Dunbar, &c.

PART III.

Second Italian School, of Ariosto, Tasso, &c., an improvement on the first, occasioned by the revival of letters, the end of the fifteenth century. The Lyric Poetry of this and the former age, introduced from Italy by Lord Surrey, Sir T. Wyatt, Bryan Lord Vaulx, &c. in the beginning of the sixteenth century.

PART IV.

Spenser, his character. Subject of his poem, allegoric and romantic, of Provençal invention: but his manner of tracing it borrowed from the second Italian school.—Drayton, Fairfax, Phineas Fletcher, Golding, Phaer, &c. This school ends in Milton. A third Italian school, full of conceit, began in Queen Elizabeth's reign, continued under James, and Charles the First, by Donne, Crashaw, Cleveland; carried to its height by Cowley, and ending perhaps in Sprat.

PART V.

School of France, introduced after the Restoration.—Waller, Dryden, Addison, Prior, and Pope,—which has continued to our own times.

---

You will observe that my idea was in some measure taken from a scribbled paper of Pope, of which I believe you have a copy. You will also see, I had excluded Dramatic poetry entirely; which if you had taken in, it would at least double the bulk and labour of your book.

I am, sir, with great esteem,

Your most humble and obedient servant,

THOMAS GRAY.

 On hasty wings thy youth is flown ;
 Thy sun is set, thy spring is gone—
 We frolic while 'tis May. 50

Gray, in a letter to H. Walpole, says : (see Walpole's Works, vol. v. p. 395.) " I send you a bit of a thing for two reasons ; first, because it is one of your favorites, Mr. M. Green ; and next, because I would do justice : the thought on which my second Ode turns, (The Ode to Spring, afterwards placed first, by Gray,) is manifestly stole from thence. Not that I knew it at the time, but having seen this many years before ; to be sure it imprinted itself on my memory, and forgetting the author, I took it for my own." Then follows the quotation from Green's Grotto. Wakefield seems to have discovered the original of this stanza in some lines in Thomson. Summer, 342.

II.* ON THE DEATH OF A FAVOURITE CAT, DROWNED IN A TUB OF GOLD FISHES.

[On a favourite cat called Selima, that fell into a China Tub with gold fishes in it, and was drowned, MS. Wharton. Walpole, after the death of Gray, placed the China Vase on a pedestal at Strawberry Hill, with a few lines of the Ode for its inscription.]

'Twas on a lofty vase's side,
Where China's gayest art had dy'd
The azure flowers, that blow ;
Demurest of the tabby kind,

Var. V. 4. In the first edition the order of these lines was reversed :

“ The pensive Selima reclin'd,
Demurest of the tabby kind.”

rical expression : ἡμεῖς δ' ἐν δυσμαῖς τοῦ βίου, de Legib. tom. ii. p. 770, ed. Serrani; and Aristotelis Poetica, cap. 35 : καὶ τὸ γῆρας Ἐσπέραν βίου. Add Catull. ad Lesb. c. 5. v. 5. “ Nobis, cum semel occidet brevis lux.” Twining, in his translation of the Poetics, together with this line from Gray, has quoted Com. of Err. (last scere) : “ Yet hath my night of life some memory,” see p. 108. It is a phrase very common among the old English poets.—Herrick has, “ *Sunk is my sight, set is my sun,

And all the loom of life undone.*”

and “ My sun begins to set,” Rowley's All's lost by Lust, p. 63, 4to. with many others.

* This Ode first appeared in Dodsley. Col. vol. ii. p. 274, with some variations ; only one of which is given by Mason. They are all noticed in this edition, as they occur.

V. 3. This expression has been accused of redundance

 Gaz'd on the lake below.

Her conscious tail her joy declar'd ;
 The fair round face, the snowy beard,
 The velvet of her paws,
 Her coat, that with the tortoise vies, 10
 Her ears of jet, and emerald eyes,
 She saw ; and purr'd applause.

Still had she gaz'd ; but 'midst the tide
 Two angel forms were seen to glide,
 The Genii of the stream : 15
 Their scaly armour's Tyrian hue

Var. V. 14. First edit. "Two beauteous forms:" a reading that appears to me preferable to the one now in the text.

by Dr. Johnson and Wakefield. See Todd's Ed. of Comus, p. 139. Gray, however, could have defended it by the usage of the ancient poets. See Ovid Metam. ix. 98. "Hunc tamen ablati domuit jactura decoris." And Statii Silv. II. v. 30: "Unius amissi tetigit jactura leonis." Ovid ad Liv. 185: "Jura silent, mutæque tacent sine vindice leges." In Jortin's Tracts, vol. i. p. 269, some examples of such redundant expressions are collected from the Greek and Latin poets. See on this subject also the notes of Burmann on Propertius, lib. iv. El. vii. v. 69; on Ovid. Met. ii. 66, and on Poem. Lotichii, lib. i. el. 8. 27. V. 15. Thomson, in his Spring, v. 400, with equal beauty, speaking of fish:

"—— in whose ample wave
 The little Naiads love to sport at large."

Through richest purple to the view
Betray'd a golden gleam.

The hapless nymph with wonder saw :
A whisker first, and then a claw, 20
With many an ardent wish,
She stretch'd, in vain, to reach the prize.
What female heart can gold despise ?
What Cat's averse to fish ?

Presumptuous maid ! with looks intent 25
Again she stretch'd, again she bent,
Nor knew the gulf between.
(Malignant Fate sat by, and smil'd)
The slipp'ry verge her feet beguil'd,
She tumbled headlong in. 30

Funduntur, violæ subluceat purpura nigræ.*"

V. 42. This proverbial expression was a favourite among the old English poets :

"But all thing, which that shineth as the gold,
Ne is no gold, as I have herd it told."

See Chaucer. Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16430. Tyrwhitt refers to the Parabolæ of Alanus de Insulis, quoted by Leyser, Hist. Poet. Med. Æv. 1074 : "Non teneas aurum, totum quod splendet ut aurum." Among the poems published with Lord Surrey's, p. 226, edit. 1717 : "Not every glistering gives the gold, that greedy folk desire." In the Paradise of Dainty Devises, "No Foe to a Flatterer,"

Eight times emerging from the flood
 She mew'd to ev'ry wat'ry God,
 Some speedy aid to send.
 No Dolphin came, no Nereid stirr'd :
 Nor cruel Tom, nor Susan heard. 35
 A fav'rite has no friend !

From hence, ye beauties, undeceiv'd,
 Know, one false step is ne'er retriev'd
 And be with caution bold.
 Not all that tempts your wand'ring eyes 40
 And heedless hearts is lawful prize,
 Nor all, that glisters, gold.

Var. V. 35. " nor Harry heard.
What favourite has a friend?" First edit.

p. 60 (reprint), is this line : " But now I see all is not gold, that glittereth in the eye." In England's Helicon, p. 194 :
 " All is not gold, that shineth bright in show." Spenser.
 F. Queen. ii. 8. 14 : " Yet gold all is not, that doth golden seem."

" Not every thinge that gives, a gleame and glitt'ring showe,
 Is tobe counted gold indeede, this proverbe well you knowe."

Turberville. Answer of a Woman to her Lover, st. iv.

" All as they say, that glitters is not gold."

Dryden. H. and Panther.

This poem was written later than the first, third, and fourth Odes, but was arranged by Gray in this place, in his own edition.

YE distant spires, ye antique towers,
That crown the wat'ry glade,
Where grateful Science still adores
Her Henry's † holy shade ;
And ye, that from the stately brow 5
Of Windsor's heights th' expanse below
Of grove, of lawn, of mead survey,

* This, as Mason informs us, was the first English production of Gray which appeared in print. It was published in folio, in 1747, and appeared again in Dodsley. Col. vol. ii. p. 267, without the name of the author. A Latin poem by him, On the Prince of Wales's Marriage, had appeared in the Cambridge Collection, in 1736, which is inserted in this edition.

V. 4. So in the Bard, ii. 3: "And spare the meek usurper's holy head." And in Install. Ode, iv. 12: "the murder'd saint." So Rich. III. ac. v. sc. 1: "Holy King Henry." And act iv. sc. iv: "When holy Henry died." This epithet has a peculiar propriety, as Henry the Sixth, though never canonized, was regarded as a saint. See Barington on the Statutes, p. 416, and Douce. Illust. of Shakesp. ii. 38. "Yea and holy Henry lying at Windsor. Barclay. Eclog. p. 4. fol.

Whose turf, whose shade, whose flowers among Wanders the hoary Thames along
 His silver-winding way : 10

Ah, happy hills ! ah, pleasing shade !

Ah, fields belov'd in vain !

Where once my careless childhood stray'd,
 A stranger yet to pain !

I feel the gales that from ye blow 15

A momentary bliss bestow,

As waving fresh their gladsome wing,

My weary soul they seem to soothe,

And, redolent of joy and youth,

To breathe a second spring. 20

“ Or if invok'd where Thames's fruitful tides

Spenser. vol. v. p. 87 : “ Silver-streaming Thames.”

V. 15. “ L'Aura gentil che rasserena i poggi

Destando i fior per questo ombroso bosco

V. 19. “ And bees their honey redolent of spring,” Dryden's Fable on the Pythag. System. Gray.—“ And every field is redolent of spring,” L. Welsted's Poems, p. 23. It appears also in the Memoirs of Europe towards the Close of the Eighth Century, by Mrs. Manly, 1716, vol. ii. p. 67 : “ The lovely Endimion, redolent of youth.” See Todd, in a note to Sams. Agonist. (Milton, vol. iv. p. 410).

V. 21. This invocation is taken from Green's Grotto : see Dodsley. Col. vol. v. p. 159.

Full many a sprightly race
 Disporting on thy margent green,
 The paths of pleasure trace;
 Who foremost now delight to cleave, 25
 With pliant arm, thy glassy wave?
 The captive linnet which enthrall?
 What idle progeny succeed
 To chase the rolling circle's speed,
 Or urge the flying ball? 30

While some on earnest business bent
 Their murm'ring labours ply
 'Gainst graver hours that bring constraint
 To sweeten liberty:
 Some bold adventurers disdain 25
 The limits of their little reign,

Var. V. 29. "To chase the hoop's elusive speed." MS.

"Say, father Thames, whose gentle pace
 Gives leave to view, what beauties grace
 Your flowery banks, if you have seen."

Perhaps both poets thought of Cowley, vol. i. p. 117:

"Ye fields of Cambridge, our dear Cambridge, say,
 Have you not seen us walking every day."

Dryden. An. Mirab. St. ccxxxii. "Old father Thames rais'd up his reverend head."

V. 24. "To virtue, in the paths of pleasure trod." Pope. Essay on Man, iii. 233.

V. 26. "On the glassy wave." Todd. ed. of Comus, p. 118.

V. 27. This expression has been noticed as tautologous. Thomson, on the same subject, uses somewhat redundant language, Spring, 702:

"Inhuman caught; and in the narrow cage
 From liberty confined and boundless air."

And unknown regions dare descry :
 Still as they run they look behind,
 They hear a voice in every wind,
 And snatch a fearful joy.

40

Gay hope is theirs by fancy fed,
 Less pleasing when possess ;
 The tear forgot as soon as shed,
 The sunshine of the breast :
 Theirs buxom health, of rosy hue,
 Wild wit, invention ever new,
 And lively cheer, of vigour born ;
 The thoughtless day, the easy night,
 The spirits pure, the slumbers light,
 That fly th' approach of morn.

Alas ! regardless of their doom
 The little victims play ;
 No sense have they of ills to come,
 Nor care beyond to-day :
 Yet see, how all around 'em wait 55
 The ministers of human fate,
 And black Misfortune's baleful train !
 Ah, show them where in ambush stand,
 To sieze their prey, the murth'rous band !
 Ah, tell them, they are men ! 60

These shall the fury Passions tear,
 The vultures of the mind,
 Disdainful Anger, pallid Fear,
 And Shame that sculks behind ;

 To bitter Scorn a sacrifice,
 And grinning Infamy.
 The stings of Falsehood those shall try, 75
 And hard Unkindness' alter'd eye,
 That mocks the tear it forc'd to flow ;
 And keen Remorse with blood defil'd,
 And moody Madness laughing wild
 Amid severest woe. 80

V. 69. Gray has here imitated Shakespeare. Richard III. act i. sc. 1 : " Grim-visag'd War." and Com. of Err. act v. sc. 1 : " A moody and dull melancholy kinsman to grim and comfortless Despair." Yarrington (Two Trag. in one) " Grim-visag'd despair." Todd.

 More hideous than their queen :
 This racks the joints, this fires the veins, 85
 That every labouring sinew strains,

 Lo ! Poverty, to fill the band,
 That numbs the soul with icy hand,
 And slow-consuming Age. 90

To each his suff'rings : all are men,
 Condemn'd alike to groan ;
 The tender for another's pain,
 Th' unfeeling for his own.
 Yet, ah ! why should they know their fate, 95

V. 83. "Hate, Fear, and Grief, the family of Pain," Pope. Essay on Man, ii. 118. Dryden. State of Innoc. act v. sc. i: "With all the numerous family of Death." Claudian uses language not dissimilar: Cons. Honor. vi. 323: "Inferno stridentes agmine Morbi." And Juv. Sat. x. 218: "Circumsedit agmine facto Morborum omne genus." Hor. Od. 1. iii. 30, "Nova febrium terris incubuit cohors."

V. 95. We meet with the same thought in Milton. Com. ver. 359:

"Peace, brother; be not over-exquisite
 To cast the fashion of uncertain evils;
 For grant they be so, while they rest unknown,
 What need a man forestall his date of grief?" W.

HYMN TO ADVERSITY.*

—Ζῆνα—

Τὸν φρονεῖν Βροτοῦς ὀδώσαντα, τῷ πάθει μαθῶν
 Θέντα κυρίως ἔχειν.

ÆSCH. AGAM. ver. 181.

[This Ode, suggested by Dionysius' Ode to Nemesis. v. Aratus. ed Oxford, p. 51, translated by S. Meyrick, in Bell's Fug. Poetry, vol. xviii. p. 161.]

DAUGHTER of Jove, relentless power,
 Thou tamer of the human breast, sorrow's spy, it is not safe to know." And Dodsley. Old Plays, xi. p. 119 :

—“ Ignorance is safe ;

I then slept happily ; if knowledge mend me not,
 Thou hast committed a most cruel sin
 To wake me into judgment.”

* This Hymn first appeared in Dodsley. Col. vol. iv. together with the “ Elegy in a Country Churchyard ;” and not, as Mason says, with the three foregoing Odes, which were published in the second volume. In Mason's edition it is called an Ode ; but the title is now restored, as it was given by the author. The motto from Æschylus is not in Dodsley.

V. 1. Ζῆνα, who may be called the goddess of Adversity,

Whose iron scourge and tort'ring hour
 The bad affright, afflict the best !
 Bound in thy adamantine chain, 5
 The proud are taught to taste of pain,
 And purple tyrants vainly groan
 With pangs unfelt before, unpitied and alone.

When first thy sire to send on earth
 Virtue, his darling child, design'd, 10 is said by Homer to be the daughter of Jupiter: Il. 7. 91. Πρέσβα διὸς θυγάτηρ Ἄττη, ἣ πάντας ἄῤῥται. Perhaps, however, Gray only alluded to the passage of Æschylus which he quoted, and which describes Affliction as sent by Jupiter for the benefit of man. Potter in his translation has had an eye on Gray. See his Transl. p. 19.

V. 2. "Then he, great tamer of all human art," Pope. Dun. i. 163.

V. 3. "Affliction's iron flail." Fletcher. Purp. Isl. ix. 28.

Ibid. In Wakefield's note, he remarks an impropriety in the poet joining to a material image, the "torturing hour." If there be an impropriety in this, it must rest with Milton, from whom Gray borrowed the verse:

" — when the scourge
 Inexorably, and the torturing hour,
 Calls us to penance." Par. Lost, ii. 90.

But this mode of speech is authorized by ancient and modern poets. In Virgil's description of the lightning which the Cyclopes wrought for Jupiter, Æn. viii. 429.

" Tres imbris torti radios, tres nubis aquosæ
 Addiderant, rutili tres ignis, et alitis Austri:
 Fulgores nunc horrificos, sonitumque, metumque
 Miscebant," &c.

In Par. Lost, x. 297, as the original punctuation stood:

" Bound with Gorgonian rigor not to move,

To thee he gave the heav'nly birth,
 And bade to form her infant mind.
 Stern rugged nurse ! thy rigid lore
 With patience many a year she bore :
 What sorrow was, thou bad'st her know, 15
 And from her own she learn'd to melt at others' woe.

Scar'd at thy frown terrific, fly
 Self-pleasing Folly's idle brood,
 Wild Laughter, Noise, and thoughtless Joy,
 And leave us leisure to be good. 20
 Light they disperse, and with them go
 The summer friend, the flatt'ring foe ;

V. 5. Ἀδαμαντίνων δεσμῶν ἐν ἀρρήκτοις πέδαις.
 Æsch. Prom. vi. W., from whom Milton. Par. L. i. 48 :
 "In adamantine chains, and penal fire." And the expression occurs also in the Works of Spenser, Drummond, Fletcher, and Drayton. See Todd's note on Milton. "In adamantine chains shall Death be bound," Pope. Messiah, ver. 47 ; and lastly, Manil. Astron. lib. i. 921. And Boison. on Philost. Heroic, p. 405.

V. 7. "Till some new tyrant lifts his purple hand," Pope. Two Choruses, ver. 23. Wakefield cites Horace, lib.
 i. od. xxxv. 12 : "Purpurei metuunt tyranni." Add Tasso.
 Gier. Lib. c. vii. Luke.

V. 8. "Strange horror seizè thee, and pangs unfelt before." Par. L. ii. 703.

V. 13. An expression similar to this occurs in Sidney.
 Arcadia, vol. iii. p. 100 : "Ill fortune, my awful governess."

V. 16. "Non ignara mali, miseris succurrere disco." Luke.

V. 20. "If we for HAPPINESS COULD LEISURE find," Hurd's Cowley, vol. i. p. 136 : and the note of the editor. "And know I have not yet the leisure to be good," Oldham. Ode, st. v. vol. i. p. 83.

V. 22. "——For men, like butterflies,
 Shew not their mealy wings, but to the summer."
 Troil. and Cress. A iii. sc. 3

By vain Prosperity receiv'd,
To her they vow their truth, and are again believ'd.

Wisdom in sable garb array'd, 25

Immers'd in rapt'rous thought profound,

And Melancholy, silent maid,

With leaden eye that loves the ground,

Still on thy solemn steps attend :

Warm Charity, the gen'ral friend, 30

With Justice, to herself severe,

And Pity, dropping soft the sadly-pleasing tear.

Oh ! gently on thy suppliant's head,

Dread goddess, lay thy chast'ning hand !

Not in thy Gorgon terrors clad, 35

Also, "The common people swarm like summer flies,
And whither fly the gnats, but to the sun."

Henry VI. P. iii. act 2. sc. 9. "Such summer-birds are men!" Tim. of Ath. act iii. sc. 7. But the exact expression is George Herbert's: "fall and flow, like leaves, about me, or like summer-friends, flies of estates and sunshine," Temple, p. 296. And (The W. Devil) v. Dodsley's Old Plays, vol. vi. p. 292. "One summer she." Quarles. Sion's Elegies, xix. "Ah, summer friendship with the summer ends." Mr. Rogers quotes Massinger's Maid of Honor, "O summer friendship." Gray seems to have had Horace in his mind, lib. I. Od. xxxv. 25.

V. 25. "O'erlaid with black, staid Wisdom's hue."

Il Pensær. 16. W.

V. 28. "With a sad leaden downward cast,

Thou fix them on the earth as fast."

Il Pensær. 43. W. "So leaden eyes." Sidney. Astroph. and Stella, Song 7. "And stupid eyes that ever loved the ground," Dryden. Cim. and Iphig. v. 57. "Melancholy lifts her head," Pope. Ode on St. Cec. v. 30. "The sad companion, dull-eyed Melancholy," Pericles, act i. sc. 2. And so we read "leaden Contemplation" in Love's Lab

Not circled with the vengeful band
 (As by the impious thou art seen)
 With thund'ring voice, and threat'ning mien,
 With screaming Horror's fun'ral cry,
 Despair, and fell Disease, and ghastly Poverty: 40

Thy form benign, oh goddess, wear,
 Thy milder influence impart,
 Thy philosophic train be there
 To soften, not to wound, my heart.
 The gen'rous spark extinct revive 45
 Teach me to love, and to forgive,
 Exact my own defects to scan,
 What others are to feel, and know myself a Man.

THE PROGRESS OF POESY.

A PINDARIC ODE.*

[Finished in 1754. Printed together with the Bard, an Ode. Aug. 8, 1757. MS.]

Φωνᾶντα συνετοῖσιν ἕς
 Δὲ τὸ πᾶν ἐρμηνέων
 Χατίζει. PINDAR. OL. II. V. 152.

I. 1.

AWAKE, Æolian lyre, awake,
 And give to rapture all thy trembling strings.

Var. V. 1. "Awake, my lyre : my glory, wake." MS.
 V. 2. Rapture] Transport. MS.

* When the author first published this and the following Ode, he was advised, even by his friends, to subjoin some few explanatory notes; but had too much respect for the understanding of his readers to take that liberty. Gray.

V. 1. "Awake, my glory : awake, lute and harp."
 David's Psalms. Gray

"Awake, awake, my lyre,
 And tell thy silent master's humble tale."

Cowley. Ode of David, vol. ii. p. 423.

Pindar styles his own poetry, with its musical accompaniments, Αἰολίς μολπή, Αἰολίδες χορδαί, Αἰολίδων πνοαὶ ἀύλων, Æolian song, Æolian strings, the breath of the Æolian flute. Gray.<sup>1</sup>

The subject and simile, as usual with Pindar, are united. The various sources of poetry, which gives life and lustre to all it touches, are here described; its quiet majestic progress enriching every subject (otherwise dry and barren) with a pomp of diction and luxuriant harmony of numbers;

From Helicon's harmonious springs

A thousand rills their mazy progress take :

The laughing flowers that round them blow, 5

Drink life and fragrance as they flow.

Now the rich stream of music winds along,

Deep, majestic, smooth, and strong, and its more rapid and irresistible course, when swoln and hurried away by the conflict of tumultuous passions. Gray.

V. 3. Thomson has joined the subject and simile in a passage strongly resembling this :

“ In thy full language speaking mighty things,

Like a clear torrent close, or else diffus'd

A broad majestic stream, and rolling on

Thro' all the winding harmony of sound.”

Liberty, ii. 257.

And see Quinctil. Inst. xii. 10. 61. “ At ille qui saxa devolvat,” &c.

In Huntingford, Apology for his Monostrophics, p. 80. referred to by Wakefield, several passages of Pindar are pointed out, to which he supposes that Gray alluded, viz. Ol. ii. 62. 229. vii. 12. xii. 6.

V. 4 “ The melting voice through mazes running.”

Milt. L'Allegro, 142. Luke.

V. 5. “ Albaque de viridi riserunt lilia prato,” Petron. cap. 127. “ Ridenti colocasia fundet acantho,” Virg. Ecl. iv. 20; and Achilles Tatius has the expression, τὸ πέταλον τῷ ζεφύρῳ γελᾷ. See Burm. ad Ovid. v. ii. p. 1023.

V. 6. “ Bibant violaria fontem,” Virg. Georg. iv. ver. 32. IV.

“ And mounting in loose robes the skies

Shed light and fragrance as she flies.”

Green. Spleen, v. 79.

V. 7. This couplet seems to have been suggested by some lines of Pope. Hor. Epist. II. ii. 171 :

“ Pour the full tide of eloquence along,

Serenely pure, and yet divinely strong.”

Wakefield refers to Pope. Cecilia, 10 :

“ While in more lengthen'd notes, and slow,

The deep majestic solemn organs blow.”

Dr. Berdmore of the Charter-House, in his pamphlet on Literary Resemblance, p. 16, supposes that Gray had Horace in his mind. Od. III. xxix. 32.

Thro' verdant vales, and Ceres' golden reign :
 Now rolling down the steep amain, 10
 Headlong, impetuous, see it pour ;
 The rocks and nodding groves rebellow to the roar.

I. 2.

Oh ! Sov'reign of the willing soul,
 Parent of sweet and solemn-breathing airs,
 Enchanting shell ! the sullen Cares 15
 And frantic Passions hear thy soft controul.
 On Thracia's hills the Lord of War

Hor. Od. iv. 2. 8.

V. 12. " And rocks the bellowing voice of boiling seas resound," Dryden. Virg. Georg. i. " Rocks rebellow to the roar," Pope. Iliad.

V. 13. Power of harmony to calm the turbulent sallies of the soul. The thoughts are borrowed from the first Pythian of Pindar. Gray.

V. 14. Milton. Comus, 555, " A soft and solemn-breathing sound." See Todd's note.

V. 15. " While sullen Cares and wither'd Age retreat," Eusden. Court of Venus, p. 101. " Revengeful Cares and sullen Sorrows dwell," Dryden. Virgil, Æn. vi. 247. " Care shuns thy soft approach, and sullen flies away," Dryden. Ceyx, vol. iv. p. 33, the same expression occurs in many other poets.

V. 17. "The God of War

Was drawn triumphant on his iron car."

 And dropt his thirsty lance at thy command.
 Perching on the scept' red hand 20
 Of Jove, thy magic lulls the feather'd king
 With ruffled plumes and flagging wing :
 Quench'd in dark clouds of slumber lie
 The terror of his beak, and lightnings of his eye.

I. 3.

 Temper'd to thy warbled lay.

V. 19. "Winn'st from his fatal grasp the spear," Collins. Ode to Mercy, ver. 5.

In the Lusus Poetici of Jortin (Hymn to Harmony, p. 45.), published in 1722, is the following couplet, strongly resembling Gray's, and from the same source :

"Thou mak'st the God of War forsake the field,
 And drop his lance, and lay aside his shield."

 The rosy-crowned Loves are seen
 On Cytherea's day ;

Young. Love of Fame, Sat. v. p. 128.

This expression, it is well known, has met with reprehension from Dr. Johnson; who appears by his criticism to have supposed it first<sup>1</sup> introduced by Gray. It was numbered, however, among the absurd expressions of Pope, by the authors of the Alexandriad, (some of the heroes of the Dunciad,) see p. 288. It occurs in a list of epithets and nouns which Pope had used, and which these authors held up to ridicule.

V. 30. " I'll charm the air to give a sound,

Glance their many-twinkling feet. 35
 Slow melting strains their Queen's approach declare Where'er she turns, the Graces homage pay.
 With arms sublime, that float upon the air,
 In gliding state she wins her easy way:
 O'er her warm cheek, and rising bosom, move 40
 The bloom of young Desire and purple light of Love.

V. 36. Compare the following stanza of a poem by Barton Booth, in his Life, written in 1718, published 1733 :

“ Now to a slow and melting air she moves,
 So like in air, in shape, in mien,
 She passes for the Paphian queen ;
 The Graces all around her play,
 The wond'ring gazers die away ;
 Whether her easy body bend,
 Or her faire bosom heave with sighs ;
 Whether her graceful arms extend,
 Or gently fall, or slowly rise ;
 Or returning or advancing,
Swimming round, or sidelong glancing,
 Strange force of motion that subdues the soul.”

II. 1.

Man's feeble race what ills await !
 Labour, and Penury, the racks of Pain,
 Disease, and Sorrow's weeping train,
 And Death, sad refuge from the storms of fate ! 45
 The fond complaint, my song, disprove,
 And justify the laws of Jove.
 Say, has he giv'n in vain the heav'nly Muse ?
 Night and all her sickly dews,
 Her spectres wan, and birds of boding cry, 50

V. 42. To compensate the real and imaginary ills of life, the Muse was given to mankind by the same Providence that sends the day, by its cheerful presence, to dispel the gloom and terrors of the night. Gray.

V. 46. "His fond complaints," Addison. Cato, A. 1, 6.

V. 49. Wakefield refers to Milton. Hymn to the Nativity, xxvi. and Par. Reg. iv. 419. But a passage in Cowley is pointed out by his last editor, Dr. Hurd, as alluded to by Gray, vol. i. p. 195 :

"Night and her ugly subjects thou dost fright,
 And Sleep, the lazy owl of night ;
 Asham'd and fearful to appear, [sphere."

 And news the boding night-birds tell."

Dryden. Pal. and Arcite. B. 1.

V. 52. "Or seen the morning's well appointed star
 Come marching up the eastern hills afar."

Cowley. Gray.

The couplet from Cowley has been wrongly quoted by Gray, and so continued by his different editors. It occurs in Brutus, an Ode, stan. iv. p. 171. vol. 1. Hurd's ed.

He gives to range the dreary sky ;
 Till down the eastern cliffs afar [war.
 Hyperion's march they spy, and glitt'ring shafts or

Var. V. 52.

"Till fierce Hyperion from afar
Pours on their scatter'd rear, his glitt'ring shafts
Hurls at their flying, [of war, o'er scatter'd shadowy
 Till o'er from far
 Hyperion hurls around his." ms.

' One would have thought 't had heard the morning crow,
 Or seen her well-appointed star
 Come marching up the eastern hills afar."

In Gray's Letter to Dr. Wharton, containing a Journal of his Tour to the Lakes, he says: "While I was here, a little shower fell, red clouds came marching up the hills from the east," &c. Mason's ed. 4. p. 175, and Warton's Note on Milton, p. 304.

V. 53. In Mant's edition of Warton (vol. ii. p. 41), and in Steevens's note on Hamlet, (act i. sc. 2), it is remarked that all the English poets are guilty of the same false quantity, with regard to this word, except Akenside, as quoted by Mant, Hymn to the Naiads, 46; and the author of 'Fuinus Troes' by Steevens. See Dodsley. Old Plays, vii. p. 500. The assertions, however, of these learned editors are not correct; as will appear from the following quotations:

"That Hyperion far beyond his bed Doth see our lions ramp, our roses spread."

Drummond (of Hawthornd.) Wand. Muses, p. 180.

"Then Hyperion's son, pure fount of day,
 Did to his children the strange tale reveal."

West. Pindar, Ol. viii. 22. p. 63.

Gray has used this word again with the same quantity. Hymn to Ignorance, v. 12: "Thrice hath Hyperion roll'd his annual race."<sup>1</sup>

V. 53. "Non radii solis, neque lucida tela diei," Lucret.

II. 2.

In climes beyond the solar road, 54
 Where shaggy forms o'er ice-built mountains roam,
 The Muse has broke the twilight gloom
 To cheer the shivering native's dull abode.
 And oft, beneath the od'rous shade
 Of Chili's boundless forests laid,
 She deigns to hear the savage youth repeat, 60

V. 62. "Reap their own fruits, and woo their sable loves." Pope. Winds. For. 410. Gray's epithet, as Dr. Warton remarks, is the more correct. He has used it again: "The dusky people drive before the gale," Frag. on Educ. and Gover. v. 105.

V. 64. This use of the verb plural, after the first substantive is in Pindar's manner, Nem. x. 91. Pyth. 4. 318. Hom. Il. E. 774. W. "I cannot help remarking (says Dugald Stewart, Philos. of the Human Mind, vol. i. p. 505, 8vo.) the effect of the solemn and uniform flow of verse in this exquisite stanza, in retarding the pronunciation of the reader, so as to arrest his attention to every successive picture, till it has time to produce its proper impression."

V. 65. Akens. Pl. of Im. i. 468: "Love's holy flame." Luke. "The unconquerable mind," is in Hor. Od. ii. 1. 22. "Et cuncta terrarum subacta, præter atrocem animum Catonis."

V. 66. Progress of Poetry from Greece to Italy, and from Italy to England. Chaucer was not unacquainted with the writings of Dante or of Petrarch. The Earl of Surrey and Sir Thomas Wyatt had travelled in Italy, and formed their taste there. Spenser imitated the Italian writers; Milton improved on them: but this school expired soon after the Restoration, and a new one arose on the French model, which has subsisted ever since. Gray.

V. 111. We have had in our language no other odes of the sublime kind, than that of Dryden on St. Cecilia's Day; for Cowley, who had his merit, yet wanted judgment, style, and harmony, for such a task. That of Pope is not worthy of so great a man. Mr. Mason indeed, of late days, has touched the true chords, and with a masterly hand, in some of his choruses; above all in the last of Caractacus:

"Hark! heard ye not yon footstep dread?" &c. Gray.

THE BARD.

A PINDARIC ODE.

[This Ode is founded on a tradition current in Wales, that Edward the First, when he completed the conquest of that country, ordered all the Bards that fell into his hands to be put to death. Gray. (See Barrington on the Statutes, p. 358; Jones's Relics, vol. i. p. 38; Sayer's Essays, p. 20.)

"RUIN seize thee, ruthless King!
Confusion on thy banners wait;

V. 120. Spenser. Hymn: "With much more orient hew." Milt. Par. L. i. 545: "with orient colours." Luke.

V. 123. "Still show how much the good outshone the great." K. Philips, fol. p. 133.

"I have sometimes thought (says Prof. D. Stewart,) that in the last line of the following passage, Gray had in view the two different effects of words already described; the effect of some, in awakening the powers of conception and imagination; and that of others in exciting associated emotions,

"Hark, his hands the lyre explore!
Bright-eyed Fancy, hov'ring o'er,
Scatters from her pictur'd urn
Thoughts that breathe, and words that burn."

Tho' fann'd by Conquest's crimson wing,
 They mock the air with idle state.
 Helm, nor hauberk's twisted mail,
 Nor e'en thy virtues, Tyrant, shall avail
 To save thy secret soul from nightly fears,
 From Cambria's curse, from Cambria's tears!"
 Such were the sounds that o'er the crested pride
 Of the first Edward scatter'd wild dismay, 10
 As down the steep of Snowdon's shaggy side

 And fan our people cold." Macbeth, act i. sc. 2.

V. 4. "Mocking the air with colours idly spread."

"Hauberks and helms are hew'd with many a wound,"
Dryden. Pal. and Arcite, lib. iii. v. 1879. Fairfax in his Trans. of Tasso, has joined these words in many places: As canto vii. 38: "Now at his helm, now at his hauberk bright." See also p. 193, 199, 299, edition 1624, folio.

V. 11. Snowdon was a name given by the Saxons to that mountainous tract which the Welsh themselves call Craigian-eryri: it included all the highlands of Caernarvonshire and Merionethshire, as far east as the river Conway. R. Hygden, speaking of the castle of Conway, built by King Edward the First, says, "Ad ortum amnis Conway ad clivum montis Erery;" and Matthew of Westminster, (ad ann. 1283) "Apud Aberconway ad pedes montis Snowdoniæ fecit erigi castrum forte." Gray.

The epithet "shaggy," applied to "Snowdon's side," is highly appropriate, as Iceland says that great woods clothed

 " To arms ! " cried Mortimer, and couch'd his

“The meteors of a troubled heaven,”

Todd mentions a passage very similar to the one in the text: “The circumference of his snowy beard like the streaming rays of a meteor appeared,” Persian Tales of Inatulla, vol. ii. p. 41. This image is often used metaphorically, as Stat. Theb. iii. 332. And see Manil. Astron. i. 836.

V. 28. Hoel is called high-born, being the son of Owen Gwynedd, prince of North Wales, by Finnog, an Irish damsel. He was one of his father's generals in his wars against the English, Flemings, and Normans, in South Wales; and was a famous bard, as his poems that are extant testify. See Evan. Spec. p. 26, 4to.; and Jones. Relics, vol. ii. p. 36, where he is called the “Princely

V. 28. In a Poem to Llewellyn, by Einion the son of Guigan, a similar epithet is given to him (p. 22), “ Llewellyn is a tender-hearted prince.” And in another Poem to him, by Llywarch Brydydd y Moch (p. 32) : “ Llewellyn, though in battle he killed with fury, though he burnt like an outrageous fire, yet was a mild prince when the mead horns were distributed.” Also in an Ode to him by Llygard Gwr (p. 39), he is called “ Llewellyn the mild, and prosperous governor of Gwynedd.” Llewellyn's ‘ soft Lay ’ is given by Jones in his Relics, vol. ii. p. 64.

V. 29. Cadwallo and Urien are mentioned by Dr. Evans in his “ Dissertatio de Bardis,” p. 78, among those bards of whom no works remain. See account of Urien's death in Jones. Relics, i. p. 19. He is celebrated in the Triads, “ as one of the three bulls of war.” Taliessin dedicated to him upwards of twelve poems, and wrote an elegy on his death : he was slain by treachery in the year 560. Modred is, I suppose, the famous “ Myrddin ab Morvryn,” called Merlyn the Wild ; a disciple of Taliessin, and bard to the Lord Gwenddolaw ab Ceidiaw. He fought under King Arthur in 542 at the battle of Camlau, and accidentally slew his own nephew. He was reckoned a truer prophet, than his predecessor the great magician Merdhin Ambrose. See a poem of his called the “ Orchard ” in Jones. Relics, vol. i. p. 24. I suppose Gray altered the name “ euphoniæ gratia ;” as I can nowhere find a bard mentioned of the name of “ Modred.”

 —Drayton has used this image very poetically in his Poly-
Olbion, vol. iii. p. 1126, in the speech of Skedow :

“ But from my glorious height into its depth I pry,
 Great hills far under me, but as my pages lie ;
 And when my helm of clouds upon my head I take.”

So in the tragedy of Nero, 1624, p. 27 : “ Hebrus stood still, Pangæa bow'd his head.”

 of Anglesey. Gray.

Dryden. Pal. and Arcite, ver. 1142 :

“ The fowl that scent afar the borders fly,
 And shun the bitter blast, and wheel about the sky.”

V. 38. Camden and others observe, that eagles used annually to build their aerie among the rocks of Snowdon, which from thence (as some think) were named by the Welsh Craigian-eryri, or the crags of the eagles. At this day (I am told) the highest point of Snowdon is called the Eagle's Nest. That bird is certainly no stranger to this island, as the Scots, and the people of Cumberland, Westmoreland, &c. can testify : it even has built its nest upon the peak of Derbyshire. [See Willoughby's Ornithol. by Ray.] Gray.
 “ The Tempest sees their strength, and sighs and passes by,” v. Swift's Misc. ii. 189.

V. 40. “ As dear to me as are the ruddy drops
 That visit my sad heart.”

Jul. Cæsar, act ii. sc. 1 Gray.

Dear as the ruddy drops that warm my heart,
 Ye died amidst your dying country's cries—
 No more I weep. They do not sleep.

On yonder cliffs, a griesly band,
 I see them sit, they linger yet, 45
 Avengers of their native land :
 With me in dreadful harmony they join,
 And weave with bloody hands the tissue of thy line.

See Callimach. H. Dian. v. 211. Theocr. Id. cap. 53. Quint. Smyrn. x. 475. Catul. xiv. 1. Virg. Æn. iv. 31. Otway, in his Venice Preserved, act v. p. 309, was more immediately in Gray's mind :

“ Dear as the vital warmth that feeds my life,
 Dear as these eyes that weep in fondness o'er thee.”

In Sydney's Arcadia, vol. ii. p. 415 : “ Oh, mother, said Amphialus, speak not of doing them hurt, no more than to mine eyes or my heart, or if I have any thing more dear than eyes or heart unto me.” King Lear, act i. sc. 2 : “ Dearer than eye-sight.”

V. 42. “ And greatly falling with a falling state,” Pope.
 “ And couldst not fall, but with thy country's fate,”

Dryden. W.

V. 44. I have thought that this image was shadowed by the poet from the following passage of Stat. xi. 420. The third line is almost translated :

“ Ipse quoque Ogygios monstra ad gentilia manes
 Tartareus rector porta jubet ira reclusa.
 Montibus insidunt patriis, tristisque corona
 Infecere diem, et vinci sua crimina gaudent.”

“ For neither were ye playing on the steep, where your old bards, the famous Druids lie.” Lycidas.

 Swift's Misc. viii. p. 198, ed. Nich.

 The characters of hell to trace.
 Mark the year, and mark the night,
 When Severn shall re-echo with affright
 The shrieks of death, thro' Berkley's roof that ring,
 Shrieks of an agonizing king! 56

She-wolf of France, with unrelenting fangs,
 That tear'st the bowels of thy mangled mate,
 From thee be born, who o'er thy country hangs
 The scourge of heav'n. What terrors round him wait!

V. 51. "I have a soul that like an ample shield
 Can take in all, and verge enough for more."

"Berkley, whose fair seat hath been famous long,
 Let thy sad echoes shriek a deadly sound
 To the vast air; complain his grievous wrong,
 And keep the blood that issued from his wound."

V. 56. This line of Gray is almost in the same words as Hume's description, vol. ii. p. 359: "The screams with which the agonizing king filled the castle."

V. 57. Isabel of France, Edward the Second's adulterous queen. Gray.

Ruin behind him stalks, and empty desolation.”

And Oldham in his Ode to Homer, stan. iii.

“Where'er he does his dreadful standard bear,
Horror stalks in the van, and slaughter in the rear.”

While horror and affright brought up the rear.” Swift.

"Mirrors* of Saxon truth and loyalty
 Your helpless, old, expiring master view!
 They hear not: scarce religion does supply
 Her mutter'd requiems, and her holy dew.
 Yet thou, proud boy, from Pomfret's walls shall send
 A sigh, and envy oft thy happy grandsire's end."

* "Mirror of ancient faith, in early youth
 Undaunted worth, inviolable truth."

Dryd. S. vi. Rogers

In Peacham's 'Period of Mourning,' 1613, a similar epithet is given, but from a different reason:

"Appeared then in armes a goodly prince
 Of swarthy hew, by whom there hung a launce
 Of wondrous length, preserved ever since ;
 He overthrew, at Poitiers, John of Fraunce.
 A dial his device, the stile at one—
 And this, 'No night, and yet my day is done.'"

V. 69. So in Agrippina:

"—— around thee call

The gilded swarm, that wantons in the sunshine
 Of thy full favour."

Vision of the World's Vanity, "Looking far forth," &c. And Vision of Petrarch, c. ii. "After at sea a tall ship did appear," &c., which passages are too long for transcription.

V. 72. "Cæruleo pollens conjunx Neptunia regno."

Virg. Cir. 483. Luke.

V. 73. So Pope, Donne. Sat. iv. 230, who has used the same words on the same subject: "Top-gallant he, and she in all her trim."

Youth on the prow, and Pleasure at the helm ;
 Regardless of the sweeping whirlwind's sway, 75
 That, hush'd in grim repose, expects his ev'ning prey.

V. 75. So in his Fragment on Education and Government, v. 48 :

“ And where the deluge burst with sweepy sway.”

The expression is from Dryden. See Virg. Georg. i. 483 :

“ And rolling onwards with a sweepy sway.”

And in Granada, act v. sc. 1 :

“ That whirls along with an impetuous sway,

And like chain-shot sweeps all things in the way.”

And Ov. Met. “ Rushing onwards with a sweepy sway.”

And Æn. vii. “ The branches bend before their sweepy sway.”

V. 76. “ So like a lion that unheeded lay,

Dissembling sleep and watchful to betray,

With inward rage he meditates his prey.”

Dryden, Sig. and Guisc.

“ Fermenting tempest brew'd in the grim evening sky.”

V. 77. Richard the Second, as we are told by Archbishop Scroop and the confederate Lords in their manifesto, by Thomas of Walsingham, and all the older writers, was starved to death. The story of his assassination by Sir Piers of Exon is of much later date. Gray.

For the profusion of Richard II. see Harding. Chron.
 quoted in the Preface to Mason's Hoccleve, p. 5 ; Daniel.
 Civil Wars, iii. 87 ; and Pennant. London, p. 89, 4to.

Fell Thirst and Famine scowl
 A baleful smile upon their baffled guest.
 Heard ye the din of battle bray,
 Lance to lance, and horse to horse? 84
 Long years of havock urge their destined course,
 And thro' the kindred squadrons mow their way.

Var. V. 82. A baleful smile] A smile of horror. MS.

Dr. Berdmore compares this passage to the following lines of Virgil, Æn. vi. 603 :

“Lucent genialibus altis
 Aurea fulcra toris, epulæque ante ora parata
 Regifico luxu : Furiarum maxima juxta
 Adcubat, et manibus prohibet contingere mensas, to the text,

“ Nor easier fate the bristled boar is lent.”

<sup>1</sup> The crest, or bearing of a warrior (says Scott in his notes to the Lay of the Last Minstrel, p. 300), was often used as a “nom de guerre.” Thus Richard III. acquired his well-known epithet,—“the Boar of York.” In the violent satire on Cardinal Wolsey, commonly but erroneously imputed to Dr. Bull, the Duke of Buckingham is called the Beautiful Swan; and the Duke of Norfolk, or Earl of Surrey, the White Lion. See Dr. Nott. Surrey. i. p. 302, 304.

“ Tell me, have ye seene her angelike face,

V. 117. Speed, relating an audience given by Queen Elizabeth to Paul Dzialinski, ambassador of Poland, says, "And thus she, lion-like rising, daunted the malapert orator no less with her stately port and majestic deporture, than with the tartnesse of her princelie checkes." Gray. See Evans. Spec. p. 18, who says, "Taliessin's poems, on account of their great antiquity, are very obscure." There is a great deal of the Druidical cabala introduced in his works, especially about the transmigration of souls. Evans says that he had fifty of Taliessin's poems; and that many spurious ones are attributed to him. At p. 56, Evans has translated one of his odes, beginning "Fair Elphin, cease to weep;" comforting his friend on his bad success in the salmon-fishery. There is a fuller account of him in Jones. Relics, vol. i. p. 18. 21. vol. ii. p. 12, 19, 31, 34, where many of his poems are translated; and Pen-nant's Wales, vol. ii. p. 316; and Turner's Vind. of the Ancient British Poems, p. 225, 237.

V. 141. There is a passage in the Thebaid of Statius, iii.
 81, similar to this, describing a bard who had survived his companions:

“ Sed jam nudaverat ensem
 Magnanimus vates, et nunc trucis ora tyranni,
 Nunc ferrum aspectans, nunquam tibi sanguinis hujus

The diff'rent doom our fates assign. 140
 Be thine despair, and scept'red care,
 To triumph, and to die, are mine."
 He spoke, and headlong from the mountain's height
 Deep in the roaring tide he plunged to endless night.*

 Insequor, et comites feror expectatus ad umbras.

Compare also the conclusion of the first Olymp. of Pindar, ver. 184, which Gray seems to have had in his mind :

Εἶη σὲ τε τοῦτον
 Ὑψοῦ χρόνον πατεῖν, ἐμέ
 Τε τοσσάδε νικαφόροις

This similarity has apparently struck the author of the late

* The original argument of this ode, as Mr. Gray had set it down in one of the pages of his common-place book, was as follows: "The army of Edward I., as they march through a deep valley, (and approach Mount Snowdon, ms.)
 are suddenly stopped by the appearance of a venerable
 with a voice more than human, reproaches the king with all the misery and desolation (desolation and misery, ms.) which he had brought on his country; foretells the misfortunes of the Norman race, and with prophetic spirit declares, that all his cruelty shall never extinguish the noble ardour of poetic genius in this island; and that men shall never be wanting to celebrate true virtue and valour in immortal strains, to expose vice and infamous pleasure, and boldly censure tyranny and oppression. His song ended, he preprecipitates himself from the mountain, and is swallowed up by the river that rolls at its foot."

"Fine (says Mr. Mason) as the conclusion of this ode is at present, I think it would have been still finer, if he could have executed it according to this plan; but, unhappily for his purpose, instances of English poets were wanting. Spenser had that enchanting flow of verse which was peculiarly calculated to celebrate virtue and valour; but he chose to celebrate them, not literally, but in allegory. Shakespeare, who had talents for every thing, was undoubtedly capable of exposing vice and infamous pleasure; and the drama was a proper vehicle for his satire; but we do not ever find that he professedly made this his object; nay, we know that, in one inimitable character, he has so contrived as to make vices of the worst kind, such as cowardice, drunkenness, dishonesty, and lewdness, not only laughable, but almost amiable; for with all these sins on his head, who can help liking Falstaff? Milton, of all our great poets, was the only one who boldly censured tyranny and oppression: but he chose to deliver this censure, not in poetry, but in prose. Dryden was a mere court parasite to the most infamous of all courts. Pope, with all his laudable detestation of corruption and bribery, was a Tory; and Addison, though a Whig, and a fine writer, was unluckily not enough of a poet for his purpose. On these considerations Mr. Gray was necessitated to change his plan towards the conclusion: hence we perceive, that in the last epode he praises Spenser only for his allegory, Shakspeare for his powers of moving the passions, and Milton for his epic excellence. I remember the ode lay unfinished by him for a year or two on this very account; and I hardly believe that it would ever have had his last hand, but for the circumstance of his hearing Parry play on the Welsh harp at a concert at Cambridge, (see Letter xxv. sect. iv.) which he often declared inspired him with the conclusion.

"Mr. Smith, the musical composer and worthy pupil of Mr. Handel, had once an idea of setting this ode, and of having it performed by way of serenata or oratorio. A common friend of his and Mr. Gray's interested himself much in this design, and drew out a clear analysis of the ode, that Mr. Smith might more perfectly understand the poet's meaning. He conversed also with Mr. Gray on the subject, who gave him an idea for the overture, and marked also some passages in the ode, in order to ascertain which should be recitative, which air, what kind of air, and how accompanied. This design was, however, not executed; and therefore I shall only (in order to give the reader a taste of Mr. Gray's musical feelings) insert in this place what his sentiments were concerning the overture. 'It should be so contrived as to be a proper introduction to the ode; it might consist of two movements, the first descriptive of the horror and confusion of battle, the last a march grave and majestic, but expressing the exultation and insolent security of conquest. This movement should be composed entirely of wind instruments, except the kettle-drum heard at intervals. The da capo of it must be suddenly broke in upon, and put to silence by the clang of the harp in a tumultuous rapid movement, joined with the voice, all at once, and not ushered in by any symphony. The harmony may be strengthened by any other stringed instrument; but the harp should every where prevail, and form the continued running accompaniment, submitting itself to nothing but the voice.'

"I cannot (adds Mr. Mason) quit this and the preceding ode, without saying a word or two concerning the obscurity which has been imputed to them, and the preference which, in consequence, has been given to his Elegy. It seems as if the persons, who hold this opinion, suppose that every species of poetry ought to be equally clear and intelligible: than which position nothing can be more repugnant to the several specific natures of composition, and to the practice of ancient art. Not to take Pindar and his odes for an example, (though what I am here defending were written professedly in imitation of him,) I would ask, are all the writings of Horace, his Epistles, Satires, and Odes, equally perspicuous? Among his odes, separately considered, are there not remarkable differences of this very kind? Is the spirit and meaning of that which begins, "Descende cælo, et dic, age, tibiâ," Ode iv. lib. 3, so readily comprehended as "Persicos odi, puer, apparatus," Ode xxxviii. lib. 1. And is the latter a finer piece of lyrical composition on that account? Is "Integer vitæ, scelerisque purus," Ode xxii. lib. 1, superior to "Pindarum quisquis studet æmulari," Ode ii. lib. 4; because it may be understood at the first reading, and the latter not without much study and reflection? Now between these odes, thus compared, there is surely equal difference in point of perspicuity, as between the Progress of Poesy, and the Prospect of Eton College; the Ode on the Spring, and the Bard. 'But' say these objectors, 'the end of poetry is universally to please. Obscurity, by taking off from our pleasure, destroys that end.' I will grant that if the obscurity be great, constant, and insurmountable, this is certainly true; but if it be only found in particular passages, proceeding from the nature of the subject and the very genius of the composition, it does not rob us of our pleasure, but superadds a new one, which arises from conquering a difficulty; and the pleasure which accrues from a difficult passage, when well understood, provided the passage itself be a fine one, is always more permanent than that which we discover at the first glance. The Lyric Muse, like other fine ladies, requires to be courted, and retains her admirers the longer for not having yielded too readily to their solicitations. This argument, ending as it does in a sort of simile, will, I am persuaded, not only have its force with the intelligent readers (the ΣΥΝΕΤΟΙ), but also with the men of fashion: as to critics of a lower class, it may be sufficient to transcribe, for their improvement, an unfinished remark, or rather maxim, which I found amongst our author's papers; and which he probably wrote on occasion of the common preference given to his Elegy. "The Gout de comparaison (as Bruyere styles it) is the only taste of ordinary minds. They do not know the specific excellence either of an author or a composition: for instance, they do not know that Tibullus spoke the language of nature and love; that Horace saw the vanities and follies of mankind with the most penetrating eye, and touched them to the quick; that Virgil ennobled even the most common images by the graces of a glowing, melodious, and well-adapted expression; but they do know that Virgil was a better poet than Horace; and that Horace's Epistles do not run so well as the Elegies of Tibullus.' "

ODE FOR MUSIC.

(IRREGULAR.)

This Ode was performed in the Senate-House at Cambridge, July, 1, 1769, at the Installation of His Grace Augustus-Henry Fitzroy, Duke of Grafton, Chancellor of the University. (This Ode is printed with the divisions adopted by the Composer, Dr. Randall, then Professor of Music at Cambridge. On Dr. Burney's disappointment that he did not set this Ode to music, see Miss Burney's Mem. i. 212 ; and Cradock's Mem. i. p. 107.)

II. RECITATIVE.

From yonder realms of empyrean day
 Bursts on my ear th' indignant lay :
 There sit the sainted sage, the bard divine, 15
 The few, whom genius gave to shine
 Thro' every unborn age, and undiscover'd clime.
 Rapt in celestial transport they :
 Yet hither oft a glance from high
 They send of tender sympathy 20

V. 13. "From your empyreal bowers, and from the realms of everlasting day." G. West's Poems.

V. 15. There sit] Surely a better word than this, "sit," in pronunciation and imagery could have been found.

 And worlds applaud that must not yet be found.*"

 Pope. Prol. to the Sat. 143. W. See Warton. Milt. p. 4.

V. 27. "*To arched walks of twilight groves,
 And shadows brown that Sylvan loves.*"
 Il Pens. 133. W

And so Pope, in his Transl. of the Odyssey : "Brown with o'er-arching shades."

This stanza, supposed to be sung by Milton, is very judiciously written in the metre which he fixed upon for the stanza of his Christmas Hymn : "'Twas in the winter wild," &c. Mason.

"Nought have we here but willow-shaded shore,
 To tell our Grant his banks are left forlore."

Hall. Sat. b. i. sat. i.

V. 30. Wakefield has justly remarked that this stanza is indebted to the following passage in the Il Pens. of Milton, ver. 61 :

To bless the place, where on their opening soul
 First the genuine ardour stole.
 'Twas Milton struck the deep-ton'd shell,
 And, as the choral warblings round him swell,
 Meek Newton's self bends from his state sublime
 And nods his hoary head, and listens to the rhyme.

* Gaw. Douglas, in his Transl. of Virgil, Prolog. to bk. xiii. p. 450, describes the notes of the nightingale as merry :

 That on the thorne sat syngand fro the splene,
 Quhais myrthfull nottis langing for to here,” &c.

“ Ah ! far unlike the nightingale !—she sings
 Unceasing thro' the balmy nights of May ;
 She sings from love and joy.” Thomson, Agamem. p. 63.

“ Him will I cheare with chanting all this night,
 And with that word she 'gan to clear her throate :
 But such a lively song, now by this light,
 Yet never hearde I such another note.”

Gascoigne. Complaynt of Phylomene.

Mr. Fox has, I think, given no authority but that of Chaucer, for the merry notes of the nightingale ; see his Letter to Lord Grey, p. 12 : But see Todd. Illust. of Gower.

V. 42. Elizabeth de Burg, countess of Clare, was wife of John de Burg, son and heir of the earl of Ulster, and daughter of Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester, by Joan of Acres, daughter of Edward the First. Hence the poet gives her the epithet of princely. She founded Clare Hall. Gray.

THE FATAL SISTERS.

AN ODE. FROM THE NORSE TONGUE.

To be found in the Orcades of Thormodus Torfæus; Hafniæ, 1697, folio; and also in Bartholinus, p. 617. lib. iii. c. 1. 4to. (The song of the Weird Sisters, translated from the Norwegian, written about 1029. Wharton, MS.)

Vitt er orpit fyrir valfalli, &c.

In the eleventh century Sigurd, earl of the Orkney Islands, went with a fleet of ships and a considerable body of troops into Ireland, to the assistance of Sictryg with the Silken beard, who was then making war on his father-in-law Brian, king of Dublin: the earl and all his forces were cut to pieces, and Sictryg was in danger of a total defeat; but the enemy had a greater loss by the death of Brian their king, who fell in the action. On Christmas day (the day of the battle), a native of Caithness in Scotland, of the name of Darrud, saw at a distance a number of persons on horseback riding full speed towards a hill, and seeming to enter into it. Curiosity led him to follow them, till looking through an opening in the rocks, he saw twelve gigantic figures resembling women: they were all employed about a loom; and as they wove, they sung the following dreadful song; which when they had finished, they tore the web into twelve pieces, and (each taking her portion) galloped six to the north, and as many to the south. These were the Valkyriur, female divinities, Parcæ Militares, servants of Odin (or Woden) in the Gothic mythology. Their name signifies Chusers of the slain. They were mounted on swift horses, with drawn swords in their hands; and in the throng of battle selected such as were destined to slaughter, and conducted them to Valkalla, the hall of Odin, or paradise of the brave; where they attended the banquet, and served the departed heroes with horns of mead and ale: their numbers are not agreed upon, some authors representing them as six, some as four. See Magni Beronii diss. de Eddis Islandicis, p. 145, in Ælrichs. Dan. et Sued lit. opuscula, vol. i.

Now the storm begins to lower,
 (Haste, the loom of hell prepare,)
 Iron sleet of arrowy shower
 Hurtles in the darken'd air.

Glitt'ring lances are the loom, 5
 Where the dusky warp we strain,
 Weaving many a soldier's doom,
 Orkney's woe, and Randver's bane could be given.

V. 7. In Thomson. Masque of Alfred, p. 126, the weaving of the enchanted standard is thus described:

"——— 'Tis the same

Wrought by the sisters of the Danish king,
 Of furious Ivar, in a midnight hour,
 While the sick moon, at their enchanted song
 Wrapt in pale tempest, labour'd thro' the clouds.
 The demons of destruction then, (they say,)
 Were all abroad, and mixing with the woof
 Their baleful power; the Sisters even sung,
 'Shake, standard, shake, this ruin on our foes!'

See the griesly texture grow !
 ('Tis of human entrails made) 10
 And the weights, that play below,
 Each a gasping warrior's head.

Shafts for shuttles, dipt in gore,
 Shoot the trembling cords along.
 Sword, that once a monarch bore, 15
 Keep the tissue close and strong.

Mista, black terrific maid,
 Sangrida, and Hilda, see,
 Join the wayward work to aid :
 'Tis the woof of victory. 20

Ere the ruddy sun be set,
 Pikes must shiver, javelins sing,
 Blade with clattering buckler meet,
 Hauberk crash, and helmet ring.

V. 49. This stanza, as it appears in the original, Mr. Herbert has translated without the insertion or omission of a word :

 While clouds thro’ heaven gore-dropping sail ;
 Air must be stain’d with blood of men,
 Ere all our oracles shall fail.”

* This Ode is much more literally translated than the preceding. The original title I have restored from Gray's MS. The first five stanzas of this Ode are omitted ; in which Balder, one of the sons of Odin, was informed that he should soon die. Upon his communication of his dream, the other gods, finding it true, by consulting the oracles, agreed to ward off the approaching danger, and sent Frigga to exact an oath from every thing not to injure Balder. She, however, overlooked the Mistletoe, with a branch of which he was afterwards slain by Hoder, at the instigation of Lok. After the execution of this commission, Odin, still

UPROSE the king of men with speed,
 And saddled straight his coal-black steed ;
 Down the yawning steep he rode,
 That leads to Hela's drear abode.
 Him the dog of darkness spied ; 5
 His shaggy throat he open'd wide,
 (While from his jaws, with carnage fill'd, Foam and human gore distill'd :)
 Hoarse he bays with hideous din,
 Eyes that glow, and fangs that grin ; 10
 And long pursues with fruitless yell,
 The father of the powerful spell.
 Onward still his way he takes,

Vali, or Ali, the son of Rinda, afterwards avenged the death of Balder, by slaying Hoder, and is called a " wondrous boy, because he killed his enemy, before he was a day old ; before he had washed his face, combed his hair, or seen one setting-sun." In a little poem called the "Magic of Odin," (see Bartholinus, p. 641,) Odin says, "If I see a man dead, and hanging aloft on a tree, I engrave Runic characters so wonderful, that the man immediately descends and converses with me. When I see magicians travelling through the air, I disconcert them with a single look, and force them to abandon their enterprize."

PROPHETESS.

What call unknown, what charms presume
 To break the quiet of the tomb?
 Who thus afflicts my troubled sprite,
 And drags me from the realms of night? 30
 Long on these mould'ring bones have beat
 The winter's snow, the summer's heat,
 The drenching dews, and driving rain!
 Let me, let me sleep again.
 Who is he, with voice unblest, 35
 That calls me from the bed of rest?

ODIN.

 Is he that calls, a warrior's son.

V. 40. Odin was anxious about the fate of his son, Balder, who had dreamed he was soon to die. He was killed by Odin's other son, Hoder, who was himself slain by Vali, the son of Odin and Rinda, consonant with this prophecy. See the Edda.

She leaned on a staff adorned with brass, with a round head set with stones; and was girt with an Hunlandish belt, at which hung her pouch full of magical instruments. Her buskins were of rough calf-skin, bound on with thongs studded with knobs of brass, and her gloves of white cat-skin, the fur turned inwards,” &c. V. 75. “ It is not certain,” says Mr. Herbert, “ what Odin means by the question concerning the weeping virgins ; but it has been supposed that it alludes to the embassy afterwards sent by Frigga to try to redeem Balder from the infernal regions, and that Odin betrays his divinity by mentioning what had not yet happened.” Iceland. Translat. p. 48,—The object of this embassy was frustrated by the perfidy of Loke, who having assumed (as was supposed) the shape of an old woman, refused to join in the general petition. “ I Lok (she said) will weep with dry eyes the funeral of Balder. Let all things living or dead, weep if they will, but let Hela keep her prey.”—After this, Loke hid himself, built a house among the mountains, and made a net. Odin however found out his hiding-place, and the gods assembled to take him. He seeing this, burnt his net, and changed himself into a salmon. After some trouble, Thor caught him by the tail, and this is the reason why salmons,

That bend to earth their solemn brow,
 That their flaxen tresses tear,
 And snowy veils that float in air?
 Tell me whence their sorrows rose :
 Then I leave thee to repose.

ever after, have had their tails so fine and thin. They bound him with chains, and suspended the serpent Skada over his head, whose venom falls upon his face drop by drop. His wife Siguna sits by his side, catches the drops as they fall from his face in a basin, which she empties as often as it is filled. He will remain in chains till the end of the world, or as the Icelanders call it, the Twilight of the Gods. To this the prophetess alludes in the last stanza. See Butler. Hor. Bibl. ii. 194.

V. 82. "Great Love! I know thee now, Eldest of the Gods, art thou."

Dryden. K. Arth. Rogers.

V. 86. In the Latin, "mater trium gigantum:" probably Angerbode, who from her name seems to be "no prophetess of good;" and who bore to Loke, as the Edda says, three children, the wolf Fenris, the great serpent of Midgard, and Hela, all of them called giants in that system of mythology. Mason. Sams. Agon. 1247, "I dread him not, not all his giant brood." Luke.

V. 88. In the original, this and the three following lines are represented by this couplet :

Art thou, nor prophetess of good ; 85
But mother of the giant brood !

PROPHECESS.

Hie thee hence, and boast at home,
That never shall enquirer come
To break my iron-sleep again ;

Never, till substantial night

W. Herbert has published a translation of the introductory lines of this poem, and also much curious information illustrating several passages in the text. See his Select Iceland Poetry, p. 43. He mentions some little amplifications in Gray, tending to convey notions of the Icelandic mythology, not warranted by the original, as “Coal-black steed ;” “Raven-hair ;” “Thrice he trac'd the Runic rhyme ;” “The portals nine of hell ;” “Foam and human gore.”

V. 89. “χάλκεος ὕπνος,” Hom. “Ferreus somnus,” Virg. Æn. xii. 309. “Iron sleep,” Dryden. And “An iron slumber shuts my sleeping eyes,” Dryden. Georg. iv. 717.

V. 90. Lok is the evil being, who continues in chains till the twilight of the gods approaches : when he shall break his bonds, the human race, the stars, and sun, shall disappear ; the earth sink in the seas, and fire consume the skies : even Odin himself and his kindred deities shall perish. For a further explanation of this mythology, see ‘Introd. à l’Hist. de Dannemarc par Mallet,’ 1755, quarto ; or rather a translation of it published in 1770, and entitled “Northern Antiquities ;” in which some mistakes in the original are judiciously corrected. Mason.

THE TRIUMPHS OF OWEN.*

A FRAGMENT. FROM THE WELSH.

[From Evans. Spec. of the Welsh Poetry, 1764, quarto, p. 25, where is a Prose version of this Poem, and p. 127. Owen succeeded his father Griffith app Cynan in the principality of N. Wales, A. D. 1137. This battle was fought in the year 1157. Jones, Relics, vol. ii. p. 36.]

OWEN'S praise demands my song,
 Owen swift, and Owen strong ;
 Fairest flower of Roderic's stem,
 Gwyneth's shield, and Britain's gem.
 He nor heaps his brooded stores, 5
 Nor on all profusely pours ;
 Lord of every regal art,
 Liberal hand, and open heart.

* The original Welsh of the above poem was the composition of Gwalchmai the son of Melir, immediately after Prince Owen Gwynedd had defeated the combined fleets of Iceland, Denmark, and Norway, which had invaded his territory on the coast of Anglesea. There is likewise another poem which describes this famous battle, written by Prince Howel, the son of Owen Gwynedd ; a literal translation of which may be seen in Jones. Relics, vol. ii. p. 36. In Mason's edition, and in all the subsequent editions, it is

Big with hosts of mighty name,
 Squadrons three against him came ; 10

 Side by side as proudly riding,
 On her shadow long and gay
 Lochlin plows the wat'ry way ;

 Black and huge along they sweep,
 Burdens of the angry deep.

From this line, to the conclusion, the translation is indebted to the genius of Gray, very little of it being in the original, which closes with a sentiment omitted by the translator: "And the glory of our Prince's wide-wasting sword shall be celebrated in a hundred languages, to give him his merited praise."

THE DEATH OF HOEL.

AN ODE. SELECTED FROM THE GODODIN.*

[See S. Turner's Vindication of Ancient British Poems, p. 50. Warton's Engl. Poetry, vol. i. p. lxiii.]

HAD I but the torrent's might,
 With headlong rage and wild affright
 Upon Deïra's squadrons hurl'd
 To rush, and sweep them from the world !

* Of Aneurin, styled the Monarch of the Bards. He flourished about the time of Taliessin, A. D. 570.<sup>1</sup> This Ode is extracted from the Gododin. See Evans. Specimens, p. 71 and 73. This Poem is extremely difficult to be understood, being written, if not in the Pictish, at least in a dialect of the Britons, very different from the modern Welsh. See Evans, p. 68-75.

“Aneurin with the flowing Muse, King of Bards, brother to Gildas Albanus the historian, lived under Mynydawg of Edinburgh, a prince of the North, whose Eurdorchogion, or warriors wearing the golden torques, three hundred and sixty-three in number, were all slain, except Aneurin and two others, in a battle with the Saxons at Cattræth, on the eastern coast of Yorkshire. His Gododin, an heroic poem written on that event, is perhaps the oldest and noblest production of that age.” Jones. Relics, vol. i. p. 17.—Taliessin composed a poem called ‘Cunobiline’s Incantation,’ in emulation of excelling the Gododin of Aneurin his rival. He accomplished his aim, in the opinion of subsequent bards; by condensing the prolixity, without losing the ideas, of his opponent.

V. 3. The kingdom of Deïra included the counties of Yorkshire, Durham, Lancashire, Westmoreland, and Cumberland. See Jones. Relics, vol. i. p. 17.

Too, too secure in youthful pride, 6
 By them, my friend, my Hoel, died,
 Great Cian's son : of Madoc old
 He ask'd no heaps of hoarded gold ;
 Alone in nature's wealth array'd,
 He ask'd and had the lovely maid. 10

To Cattræth's vale in glitt'ring row
 Thrice two hundred warriors go :
 Every warrior's manly neck
 Chains of regal honour deck,
 Wreath'd in many a golden link : 15
 From the golden cup they drink
 Nectar that the bees produce,
 Or the grape's extatic juice.
 Flush'd with mirth and hope they burn :
 But none from Cattræth's vale return, 20

V. 7. Cian] In Jones. Relics it is spelt 'Kian.'

V. 11. In the rival poem of Taliessin mentioned before, this circumstance is thus expressed : "Three, and three-score, and three hundred heroes flocked to the variegated banners of Cattræth ; but of those who hastened from the flowing mead-goblet, save three, returned not. Cynon and Cattræth with hymns they commemorate, and me for my blood they mutually lament." See Jones. Relics, vol. ii. p. 14.—"The great topic perpetually recurring in the Gododin is, that the Britons lost the battle of Cattræth, and suffered so severely, because they had drunk their mead too profusely. The passages in the Gododin are numerous on this point." See Sharon Turner's Vindication of the Anc. British Poems, p. 51.

V. 14. See Sayer's War Song, from the Gaelic, in his Poems, p. 174.

V. 17. See Fr. Goldsmith. Transl. of Grotius. Joseph Sophompaneas. p. 9. "Nectar of the Bees," and Euripid. Bacchæ. v. 143. ῥεῖ δὲ μελισσᾶν νέκταρι.

* This and the following short fragment ought to have appeared among the Posthumous Pieces of Gray; but it was thought preferable to insert them in this place, with the preceding fragment from the Gododin. See Jones. Relics, vol. i. p. 17.

† In Jones. Relics, vol. i. p. 17, it is 'Vedel's name;' and in turning to the original I see 'Rhudd Fedel,' as well as in the Latin translation of Dr. Evans, p. 75.

SONNET

ON THE DEATH OF MR. RICHARD WEST.

[See W. S. Landori Poemata, p. 186.]

IN vain to me the smiling mornings shine,
 And redd'ning Phœbus lifts his golden fire :
 The birds in vain their amorous descant join ;
 Or cheerful fields resume their green attire :
 These ears, alas ! for other notes repine 5
 A different object do these eyes require :
 My lonely anguish melts no heart but mine ;
 And in my breast the imperfect joys expire.

V. 9. "Primosque et extremos metendo stravit humum, sine clade victor." Hor. Od. iv. 14, 31.

morn." Luke.

V. 2. Lucret. vi. 204, "Devolet in terram liquidi color
aureus ignis." Luke.

V. 3. Milt. P. L. iv. 602, "She all night long her amo- rous descant sung." Luke.

V. 8. "And in my ear the imperfect accent dies."

V. 12. Spens. B. Id. cant. iii. st. 5 : "On these Cupido winged armies led, of little loves." Luke.

V. 14. A line similar to this occurs in Cibber's Alteration of Richard the Third, act ii. sc. 2 :

Yet morning smiles the busy race to cheer,      9
 And new-born pleasure brings to happier men :
 The fields to all their wonted tribute bear :
 To warm their little loves the birds complain :
 I fruitless mourn to him that cannot hear,
 And weep the more, because I weep in vain.

EPITAPH ON MRS. JANE CLARKE.

This lady, the wife of Dr. John Clarke, physician at Epsom, died April 27, 1757; and was buried in the church of Beckenham, Kent.

Lo ! where this silent marble weeps,
 A friend, a wife, a mother sleeps :
 A heart, within whose sacred cell
 The peaceful virtues lov'd to dwell.

“ So we must weep, because we weep in vain.”

“ Solon, when he wept for his son's death, on one saying to him, ‘ Weeping will not help,’ answered: Δὶ αὐτὸ δὲ τοῦτο δακρῦω, ὅτι οὐδὲν ἀνύπτω. ‘ I weep for that very cause, that weeping will not avail.’” See Diog. Laert. vol. i. p. 39. ed. Meibomii. It is also told of Augustus. See also Fitzgeffry's Life and Death of Sir Francis Drake, B. 99. “ Oh ! therefore do we plaine,

And therefore weepe, because we weepe in vaine.”

See also Dodsley's Old Plays, vol. x. p. 139, and Bamfylde's Sonnets, p. 6. ed. Park.

 “ orat te flebile Saxum.” Burm. Anthol. Lat. vol. ii. p. 282.

Affection warm, and faith sincere, 5
 And soft humanity were there.
 In agony, in death resign'd,
 She felt the wound she left behind,
 Her infant image here below,
 Sits smiling on a father's woe : 10
 Whom what awaits, while yet he strays
 Along the lonely vale of days ?
 A pang, to secret sorrow dear ;
 A sigh ; an unavailing tear ;
 Till time shall every grief remove, 15
 With life, with memory, and with love.

Var. V. 7—10. In agony, &c.]

" To hide her cares her only art,
 Her pleasure, pleasures to impart,
 In ling'ring pain, in death resign'd,
 Her latest agony of mind
 Was felt for him, who could not save
 His all from an untimely grave." MS.

EPITAPH ON SIR WILLIAM WILLIAMS.*

This Epitaph was written at the request of Mr. Frederick Montagu, who intended to have inscribed it on a monument at Bellisle, at the siege of which Sir W. Williams was killed, 1761. See Mason's Memoirs, vol. i. p. 73; and vol. iv. p. 76, and H. Walpole's Lett. to G. Montagu, p. 244. See account of Sir W. P. Williams, in Brydges. Restituta, vol. iii. p. 53; and in Clubs of London, vol. ii. p. 13. "In the recklessness of a desponding mind, he approached too near the enemy's sentinels, and was shot through the body."

"Valiant in arms, courteous and gay in peace,

HERE, foremost in the dangerous paths of fame,

His mind each Muse, each Grace adorn'd his frame,
Nor envy dar'd to view him with a frown.

At Aix, his voluntary sword he drew, 5
 There first in blood his infant honour seal'd ;
 From fortune, pleasure, science, love, he flew,
 And scorn'd repose when Britain took the field.

With eyes of flame, and cool undaunted breast,
 Victor he stood on Bellisle's rocky steeps— 10
 Ah, gallant youth ! this marble tells the rest,
 Where melancholy friendship bends, and weeps.

ELEGY WRITTEN IN A COUNTRY CHURCH-YARD.

The manuscript variations in this poem, in the Wharton papers, agree generally with those published by Mr. Matthias, vol. i. p. 65, in his edition of Gray's Works. See Barrington on the Statutes, p. 154. British Bibliog. vol. iii. p. viii.

THE curfew tolls the knell of parting day,
 The lowing herd winds slowly o'er the lea,
 The ploughman homeward plods his weary way,
 And leaves the world to darkness and to me.

V. 5. Sir William Williams, in the expedition to Aix, was on board the Magnanime with Lord Howe ; and was deputed to receive the capitulation. This expression has been adopted by Scott :

“ Since riding side by side, our hand
 First drew the voluntary brand.”

Now fades the glimmering landscape on the sight,

 And drowsy tinklings lull the distant folds :

Save that from yonder ivy-mantled tow'r,

Var. V. 8. And] Or. ms. M. and W.

“The curfew tolls!—the knell of parting day.”

So I read, says Dr. Warton, Notes on Pope, vol. i. p. 82.
 Dryden has a line resembling this :

“That tolls the knell of their departed sense.”

See Prol. to Troilus and Cressida, ver. 22. And not dissimilar is Shakes. Henry IV. pt. ii. act i. sc. 2 :

“—— a sullen bell

Remember'd knolling a departed friend.”

V. 2. In the Diosem. of Aratus, this picture is drawn similar to that of the English poet, ver. 387 :

Ἡ δ' ὅτε μυκηθμοῖο περίπλειοι ἀγέρονται
 Ἐρχόμεναι σταθμόνδε βοῆς βουλύσιον ὤρην,
 Σκυθραὶ λειμωνὸς πόριες καὶ βουβοσίοιο.

And so Dionys. in his Perieg. ver. 190 :

Κείνοισ δ' ὄυποτε τερπνὸς ἀκούεται ὀλκὸς ἀμάξης,
 Οὐ δὲ βοῶν μυκηθμὸς ἐς αὔλιον ἐρχομενάων.

“And now she was upon the weary way.” Luke.

V. 4. A similar expression occurs in Petrarch, p. 124 :

 E 'l aer nostro, e la mia mente imbruna.”

His cloister'd flight ; ere, to black Hecate's summons,
 The shard-borne beetle with his drowsy hum

Hath rung night's yawning peal.” Macb. act iii. sc. 2.

And so Collins, in his Ode to Evening :

The moping owl does to the moon complain 10
 Of such as, wand'ring near her secret bow'r,
 Molest her ancient solitary reign.

Beneath those rugged elms, that yew-tree's shade,
 Where heaves the turf in many a mould'ring heap,
 Each in his narrow cell for ever laid, 15
 The rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep.

“ Or where the beetle winds
 His small, but sullen horn ;
 As oft he rises midst the twilight path,
 Against the pilgrim borne in heedless hum.” W.

V. 10. The “ignavus bubo” of Ovid. Met. v. 550. The two following passages might supply the images in the Elegy :

“ Assiduous in his bower the wailing owl
 Plies his sad song.” Thoms. Winter, 114.

And “ the wailing owl
 Screams solitary to the mournful moon.”

 That nameless heave the crumbled ground.”

Parnell. Night Piece, 29. W.

V. 15. See Hor. Od. i. iv. 17 : “ Domus exilis Plutonia.” The word domus, which answers to our poet's cell, is often in Latin authors put for sepulchrum ; as may be seen by referring to Burmans's Petronius, cap. 71 ; and Markland's Statius, p. 255 : the reason of which is given in Barthelemy's Travels in Italy, p. 349.

V. 17. “ And e'er the odorous breath of morn,”

Arcades, ver. 56

“ In Eden, on the humid flowers that breath'd

Their morning incense.” Par. Lost, b. ix. 192. W.

And so Pope. Messiah, ver. 24 :

“ With all the incense of the breathing spring.”

V. 18. “ Mane jam clarum reserat fenestras,

The breezy call of incense-breathing morn,
 The swallow twitt'ring from the straw-built shed
 The cock's shrill clarion, or the echoing horn,

Hesiod gives the swallow a very appropriate epithet: χειδῶν ὀρθρογόη Εργ. 567. Wakefield quotes Thomson. Autumn, ver. 835. "The swallow-people;—there they twitter cheerful." "Evandrum ex humili tecto lux suscitât alma, et matutini volucrum sub culmine cantus." v. Virg. Æn. viii. 455.

V. 19. "When chanticleer with clarion shrill recalls
 The tardy day." Philips. Cyder, i. 753.

Wakefield cites Par. Lost, b. vii. 443:

"The crested cock, whose clarion sounds
 The silent hours."

And Hamlet, act i. sc. 1. L'Allegro, ver. 53. To which add Quarles. Argalus and Parthenia, p. 22:

"I slept not, till the early bugle-horn
 Of chaunticlere had summon'd in the morn."

Thomas Kyd has also joined the two images (England's Parnassus, p. 325):

"The cheerful cock, the sad night's trumpeter,
 Wayting upon the rising of the sunne.
 The wandering swallow with her broken song."

Horace has added to the picture an image copied by Gray:

"Quod si pudica mulier, in partem juvet
 Domum, atque dulces liberos,

. . . . .

No children run to lisp their sire's return,
Or climb his knees the envied kiss to share.

Oft did the harvest to their sickle yield, 25
Their furrow oft the stubborn glebe has broke :
How jocund did they drive their team afield !
How bow'd the woods beneath their sturdy stroke !

Let not ambition mock their useful toil,
Their homely joys, and destiny obscure ; 30

With tears of artless innocence."

Gray's stanza is, however, chiefly indebted to some verses in his friend West's Monody on Queen Caroline :

V. 60. Edwards, the author of "The Canons of Criticism," here added the two following stanzas, to supply what he deemed a defect in the poem:

"Some lovely fair, whose unaffected charms
 Shone with attraction to herself unknown;
 Whose beauty might have bless'd a monarch's arms,
 Whose virtue cast a lustre on a throne.

Forbad to wade thro' slaughter to a throne,

Exalt the brave, and idolize success ;

“ That humble beauty warm'd an honest heart,
And cheer'd the labours of a faithful spouse ;
That virtue form'd for every decent part,

 They kept the noiseless tenour of their way.

 Than pow'r or genius e'er conspir'd to bless
 " And thou who, mindful of th' unhonour'd dead,

 In still small accents whisp'ring from the ground,
 A grateful earnest of eternal peace.
 " No more, with reason and thyself at strife,
 Give anxious cares and endless wishes room ;
 But through the cool sequester'd vale of life
 Pursue the silent tenour of thy doom."

And here the poem was originally intended to conclude, before the happy idea of the hoary-headed swain, &c. suggested itself to him. Mason thinks the third of these rejected stanzas equal to any in the whole elegy.

Their name, their years, spelt by th' unletter'd Muse
 The place of fame and elegy supply :
 And many a holy text around she strews,
 That teach the rustic moralist to die.

For who, to dumb forgetfulness a prey, 85
 This pleasing anxious being e'er resign'd,

THE EPITAPH.*

Here rests his head upon the lap of earth
A youth, to fortune and to fame unknown:
Fair science frown'd not on his humble birth,
And melancholy mark'd him for her own. 120

Large was his bounty, and his soul sincere, lines however are, in themselves, exquisitely fine, and demand preservation:

" 'There scatter'd oft, the earliest of the year,
By hands unseen are show'rs of violets found;
The redbreast loves to build and warble there,
And little footsteps lightly print the ground.' "

V. 117. " — How glad would lay me down,
As in my mother's lap." Par. Lost, x. 777.

Also Spens. F. Qu. v. 7. 9:

" — On their mother earth's dear lap did lie."

" Redditur enim terræ corpus, et ita locatum ac situm quasi operimento matris obducetur." Cicero de Legibus, ii. 22. Lucr. i. 291. "gremium matris terrai."

I cannot help adding to this note, the short and pathetic sentence of Plin. Hist. Nat. ii. 63. "Nam terra novissime complexa gremio jam a reliquâ naturâ abnegatos, tum maxime, ut mater, operit."

V. 119. " Quem tu, Melpomene, semel Nascentem placido lumine videris."
Hor. Od. iv. 3. 1. W.

V. 121. " Large was his soul, as large a soul as e'er Submitted to inform a body here."

" A passage which," says the editor, " Gray seemed to have had his eye on."

Heaven did a recompense as largely send :
 He gave to mis'ry (all he had) a tear,
 He gain'd from heav'n ('twas all he wish'd) a friend.

 Or draw his frailties from their dread abode,

Hooker has defined 'hope' to be a "trembling expectation of things far removed," Eccl. Pol. B. I. cited in Quart. Rev. No. xxii. p. 315.

In the Gentleman's Magaz. vol. lii. p. 20, it is asserted that Gray's Elegy was taken from Collins's Ode to Evening; while in the Monthly Rev. vol. liii. p. 102, it is said to be indebted to an Elegy by Gay. I see, however, no reason for assenting to these opinions. The passages from 'Celio Magno,' produced in the Edinb. Rev. vol. v. p. 51, are very curious, and form an interesting comparison. It is well known how much the Italian poet Pignotti is indebted to the works of Gray: some passages would have been given, but the editor was unwilling to increase the number of the notes, already perhaps occupying too much space.

A LONG STORY.*

[See Mason's Memoirs, vol. iii. p. 130, and Pennant's Life, p. 23.]

Gray's Elegy in a Country Church-yard, previous to its publication, was handed about in manuscript; and had amongst other admirers the Lady Cobham, who resided at the mansion-house at Stoke Pogeis. The performance inducing her to wish for the author's acquaintance, her relation, Miss Speed, and Lady Schaub, then at her house, undertook to effect it. These two ladies waited upon the author at his aunt's solitary habitation, where he at that time resided; and not finding him at home, they left a card behind them. Mr. Gray, surprised at such a compliment, returned the visit. And as the beginning of this acquaintance bore some appearance of romance, he soon after gave a humorous account of it in the following copy of verses, which he entitled "A Long Story." Printed in 1753 with Mr. Bentley's designs, and repeated in a second edition. MS.

* This Poem was rejected by Gray in the Collection published by himself; and though published afterwards by Mason in his Memoirs of Gray, he placed it amongst the Letters, together with the Posthumous Pieces; not thinking himself authorized to insert among the Poems, what the author had rejected.

Sir Edmond Coke's mansion at Stoke-Pogeis, now the seat of Mr. Penn, was the scene of Gray's Long Story. The antique chimneys have been allowed to

To raise the ceiling's fretted height, 6

 Rich windows that exclude the light,
 And passages, that lead to nothing.

Full oft within the spacious walls,
 When he had fifty winters o'er him, 10
 My grave Lord-Keeper led the brawls;
 The seals and maces danc'd before him.

His bushy beard, and shoe-strings green,
 His high-crown'd hat, and satin doublet,
 Mov'd the stout heart of England's queen, 15
 Though Pope and Spaniard could not trouble it.

 Shame of the versifying tribe!

 Can you do nothing but describe? 20

Who prowl'd the country far and near, 45
 Bewitch'd the children of the peasants,
 Dried up the cows, and lam'd the deer,
 And suck'd the eggs, and kill'd the pheasants.

V. 41. It has been said, that this gentleman, a neighbour and acquaintance of Gray's in the country, was much displeas'd with the liberty here taken with his name: yet, surely, without any great reason. Mason. Mr. Robert Purt was Fellow of King's Coll. Cant. 1738. A. B. 1742. A. Rapp'd at the door, nor stay'd to ask, 55
 But bounce into the parlour enter'd.

The trembling family they daunt,
 They flirt, they sing, they laugh, they tattle,
 Rummage his mother, pinch his aunt,
 And up stairs in a whirlwind rattle : 60

Each hole and cupboard they explore,
 Each creek and cranny of his chamber,
 Run hurry-scurry round the floor,
 And o'er the bed and tester clamber ;

Into the drawers and china pry, 65
 Papers and books, a huge imbroglio !
 Under a tea-cup he might lie,
 Or creased, like dogs-ears, in a folio.

There are still stronger Scotch statutes against them, some condemning them and "such like fules" to lose their ears, and others their lives. By a law of Elizabeth, the English minstrels were pronounced "rogues, vagabonds, and sturdy beggars," xxxix. Eliz. c. 4. s. 2. See Ritson's Engl. Songs, 1. liii. Barrington on the Statutes, p. 360. V. 67. There is a very great similarity between the style of part of this poem, and Prior. Tale of the 'Dove:' as for instance in the following stanzas, which Gray, I think, must have had in his mind at the time :

"With one great peal they rap the door,
 Like footmen on a visiting day :
 Folks at her house at such an hour,
 Lord ! what will all the neighbours say ?
 * * * * *

"Her keys he takes, her door unlocks,
 Thro' wardrobe, and thro' closet bounces,

On the first marching of the troops,
 The Muses, hopeless of his pardon, 70
 Convey'd him underneath their hoops
 To a small closet in the garden.

So rumour says: (who will, believe.)
 But that they left the door ajar,
 Where, safe and laughing in his sleeve, 75
 He heard the distant din of war.

Short was his joy. He little knew
 The pow'r of magic was no fable;
 Out of the window, wisk, they flew,
 But left a spell upon the table. 80

The words too eager to unriddle,
 The poet felt a strange disorder;
 Transparent bird-lime form'd the middle,
 And chains invisible the border.

So cunning was the apparatus, 85
 The powerful pot-hooks did so move him,
 That, will he, nill he, to the great house
 He went, as if the devil drove him.

Yet on his way (no sign of grace,
 For folks in fear are apt to pray) 90

Peeps into every chest and box,
 Turns all her furbelows and flounces.

The bard, with many an artful fib,
 Had in imagination fenc'd him,
 Disprov'd the arguments of Squib, 115
 And all that Groom could urge against him.

But soon his rhetoric forsook him,
 When he the solemn hall had seen ;
 A sudden fit of ague shook him,
 He stood as mute as poor Maclean. 120

Yet something he was heard to mutter,
 " How in the park beneath an old tree, (Without design to hurt the butter,
 Or any malice to the poultry,)

" He once or twice had penn'd a sonnet ; 125
 Yet hop'd, that he might save his bacon :

 He ne'er was for a conj'rer taken."

James Squibb, was the son of Dr. Arthur Squibb, the descendant of an ancient and respectable family, whose pedigree is traced in the herald's visitations of Dorsetshire, to John Squibb of Whitchurch in that county, in the 17th Edw. IV. 1477. Dr. Squibb matriculated at Oxford in 1656, took his degree of M.A. in November, 1662, was chaplain to Colonel Bellasis's regiment about 1685, and died in 1697. As he was in distressed circumstances towards the end of his life, his son, James Squibb, was left almost destitute, and was consequently apprenticed to an upholder in 1712. In that situation he attracted the notice

ODE ON THE PLEASURE ARISING FROM VICISSITUDE.

Left unfinished by Gray. With additions by Mason, distinguished by inverted commas. (I have read something that Mason has done in finishing a half written ode of Gray. I find he will never get the better of that glare of colouring, 'that dazzling blaze of song,' an expression of his own, and ridiculous enough, which disfigures half his writings. V. With vermeil cheek and whisper soft
 She wooes the tardy spring:
 Till April starts, and calls around 5
 The sleeping fragrance from the ground ;
 And lightly o'er the living scene
 Scatters his freshest, tenderest green.

New-born flocks, in rustic dance,
 Frisking ply their feeble feet ; 10
 Forgetful of their wintry trance
 The birds his presence greet :
 But chief, the sky-lark warbles high
 His trembling thrilling extasy ;
 And, lessening from the dazzled sight, 15
 Melts into air and liquid light.

Rise, my soul ! on wings of fire,
 Rise the rapt'rous choir among ;

 Frisk the lambs with faltering pace.”

V. 17. Mason informs us, that he has heard Gray say, that Gresset's “ Epitre à ma Sœur ” gave him the first idea of this ode ; and whoever, he says, compares it with the French poem, will find some slight traits of resemblance, but chiefly in the author's seventh stanza. The following lines seem to have been in Gray's remembrance at this place :

“ Mon âme, trop long tems flétrie
 Va de nouveau s'épanouir ;
 Et loin de toute rêverie
 Voltiger avec le Zéphire,

Occupé tout entier du soin du plaisir d'être,” &c.

THEB. LIB. VI. VER. 701—724.

THIRD in the labours of the disc came on,
 With sturdy step and slow, Hippomedon ;
 Artful and strong he pois'd the well-known weight,
 By Phlegyas warn'd, and fir'd by Mnestheus' fate,
 That to avoid, and this to emulate. 5
 His vigorous arm he tried before he flung,
 Brac'd all his nerves, and every sinew strung ;
 Then, with a tempest's whirl, and wary eye,
 Pursu'd his cast, and hurl'd the orb on high ;

* This translation, written at the age of twenty, which Gray sent to West, consisted of about a hundred and ten lines. Mason selected twenty-seven lines, which he published, as Gray's first attempt at English verse ; and to show how much he had imbibed of Dryden's spirited manner at that early period of his life. See the memoirs, vol. ii. p. 12.

The orb on high tenacious of its course, 10
 True to the mighty arm that gave it force,
 Far overleaps all bound, and joys to see
 Its ancient lord secure of victory.
 The theatre's green height and woody wall
 Tremble ere it precipitates its fall; 15
 The ponderous mass sinks in the cleaving ground,
 While vales and woods and echoing hills rebound.
 As when from Ætna's smoking summit broke,
 The eyeless Cyclops heav'd the craggy rock;
 Where Ocean frets beneath the dashing oar, 20
 And parting surges round the vessel roar;
 'Twas there he aim'd the meditated harm,
 And scarce Ulysses scap'd his giant arm.
 A tiger's pride the victor bore away,
 With native spots and artful labour gay, 25
 A shining border round the margin roll'd,
 And calm'd the terrors of his claws in gold.

THE FRAGMENT OF A TRAGEDY,
DESIGNED BY MR. GRAY ON THE SUBJECT OF THE DEATH OF AGRIPPINA.*

“THE Britannicus of Racine, I know, was one of Gray's most favourite plays; and the admirable manner in which I have heard him say that he saw it represented at Paris, seems to have led him to choose the death of Agrippina for his first and only effort in the drama. The execution of it also, as far as it goes, is so very much in Racine's taste, that I suspect, if that great poet had been born an Englishman, he would have written precisely in the same style and manner. However, as there is at present in this nation a general prejudice against declamatory plays, I agree with a learned friend, who perused the manuscript, that this fragment will be little relished by the many; yet the admirable strokes of nature and character with which it abounds, and the majesty of its diction, prevent me from withholding from the few, who I expect will relish it, so great a curiosity (to call it nothing more) as part of a tragedy written by Gray. These persons well know, that till style and sentiment be a little more regarded, mere action and passion will never secure reputation to the author, whatever they may do to the actor. It is the business of the one 'to strut and fret his hour upon the stage;' and if he frets and struts enough, he is sure to find his reward in the plaudit of an upper gallery; but the other ought to have some regard to the cooler judgment of the closet: for I will be bold to say that if Shakespeare himself had not written a multitude of passages which please there as much as they do on the stage, his reputation would not stand so universally high as it does at present. Many of these passages, to the shame of our theatrical taste, are omitted constantly in the representation: but I say not this from conviction that the mode of writing, which Gray pursued, is the best for dramatic purposes. I think myself, what I have asserted elsewhere,* that a medium between the French and English taste would be preferable to either; and yet this medium, if hit with the greatest nicety, would fail of success on our theatre, and that for a very obvious reason. Actors (I speak of the troop collectively) must all learn to speak as well as act, in order to do justice to such a drama.

“But let me hasten to give the reader what little insight I can into Gray’s plan, as I find and select it from two detached papers. The Title and Dramatis Personæ are as follow.” (See Mason. Life of Gray, vol. iii. p. 8.)

AGRIPPINA, A TRAGEDY.

[It appears that Lord Hervey left in ms. a tragedy of Agrippina, in rhymed verse, see Walpole’s Noble Authors, p. 453. There is a tragedy of Agrippina by Lohenstein, see Resumè de l’ Hist. Allemande par A. L. Veimars, p. 271. See Cibber’s Lives of the Poets, vol. ii. p. 8.]

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

AGRIPPINA, the Empress-mother.

NERO, the Emperor.

POPPEA, believed to be in love with OTHO.

OTHO, a young man of quality, in love with POPPEA.

SENECA, the Emperor’s Preceptor.

ANICETUS, Captain of the Guards.

DEMETRIUS, the Cynic, friend to SENECA.

ACERONIA, Confidant to AGRIPPINA.

SCENE—The Emperor’s villa at Baia.

“THE argument drawn out by him, in these two papers, under the idea of a plot and under-plot, I shall here unite; as it will tend to show that the action itself was possessed of sufficient unity.

“The drama opens with the indignation of Agrippina, at receiving her son’s orders from Anicetus to remove from Baia, and to have her guard taken from her. At this time

Otho having conveyed Poppæa from the house of her husband Rufus Crispinus, brings her to Baiæ, where he means to conceal her among the crowd ; or, if his fraud is discovered, to have recourse to the Emperor's authority ; but, knowing the lawless temper of Nero, he determines not to have recourse to that expedient but on the utmost necessity. In the mean time he commits her to the care of Anicetus, whom he takes to be his friend, and in whose age he thinks he may safely confide. Nero is not yet come to Baiæ : but Seneca, whom he sends before him, informs Agrippina of the accusation concerning Rubellius Plancus, and desires her to clear herself, which she does briefly : but demands to see her son, who, on his arrival, acquits her of all suspicion, and restores her to her honours. In the mean while, Anicetus, to whose care Poppæa had been intrusted by Otho, contrives the following plot to ruin Agrippina : he betrays his trust to Otho, and brings Nero as it were by chance, to the sight of the beautiful Poppæa ; the Emperor is immediately struck with her charms, and she, by a feigned resistance, increases his passion : though, in reality, she is from the first dazzled with the prospect of empire, and forgets Otho : she therefore joins with Anicetus in his design of ruining Agrippina, soon perceiving that it will be for her interest. Otho hearing that the Emperor had seen Poppæa, is much enraged ; but not knowing that this interview was obtained through the treachery of Anicetus, is readily persuaded by him to see Agrippina in secret, and acquaint her with his fears that her son Nero would marry Poppæa. Agrippina, to support her own power, and to wean the Emperor from the love of Poppæa, gives Otho encouragement, and promises to support him. Anicetus secretly introduces Nero to hear their discourse ; who resolves immediately on his mother's death, and, by Anicetus's means, to destroy her by drowning. A solemn feast, in honour of their reconciliation, is to be made ; after which she being to go by sea to Bauli, the ship is so contrived as to sink or crush her ; she escapes by accident, and returns to Baiæ. In this interval Otho has an interview with Poppæa ; and being duped a second time by Anicetus and her, determines to fly with her into Greece, by means of a vessel which is to be furnished by Anicetus ; but he, pretending to remove Poppæa on board in the night, conveys her to Nero's apartment : she then encourages and determines Nero to banish Otho, and finish the horrid deed he had attempted on his mother. Anicetus undertakes to execute his resolves ; and, under pretence of a plot upon the Emperor's life, is sent with a guard to murder Agrippina, who is still at Baia in imminent fear, and irresolute how to conduct herself. The account of her death, and the Emperor's horror and fruitless remorse, finishes the drama.

ACT I. SCENE I.

AGRIPPINA. ACERONIA.

AGRIP. 'Tis well, begone ! your errand is perform'd, [Speaks as to Anicetus entering.
 The message needs no comment. Tell your master, His mother shall obey him. Say you saw her Yielding due reverence to his high command :
 Alone, unguarded and without a lictor, 5
 As fits the daughter of Germanicus.
 Say, she retir'd to Antium ; there to tend Her household cares, a woman's best employment. What if you add, how she turn'd pale and trembled : You think, you spied a tear stand in her eye, 10
 And would have dropp'd, but that her pride restrain'd (Go ! you can paint it well) 'twill profit you, [it ?
 And please the stripling. Yet 'twould dash his joy To hear the spirit of Britannicus
 Yet walks on earth : at least there are who know Without a spell to raise, and bid it fire 16

To her that gave it being, her that arm'd
This painted Jove, and taught his novice hand 30

Scar'd at the sound, and dazzled with its brightness ?

'Tis like, thou hast forgot, when yet a stranger
To adoration, to the grateful steam
Of flattery's incense, and obsequious vows 35
From voluntary realms, a puny boy,
Deck'd with no other lustre, than the blood
Of Agrippina's race, he liv'd unknown

Some edileship, ambitious of the power 40
To judge of weights and measures ; scarcely dar'd

 The mask of prudence ; but a heart like mine,

I well remember too (for I was present) 60
 When in a secret and dead hour of night,
 Due sacrifice perform'd with barb'rous rites

 And outcry of the battle? Have his limbs Sweat under iron harness? Is he not
 The silken son of dalliance, nurs'd in ease
 And pleasure's flow'ry lap?—Rubellius lives,

ESSAY I.

—— Πόταγ', ὦ 'γαθέ· τὰν γὰρ ἀοιδὰν
Οὔτι πα εἰς Αἴδαν γε τὸν ἐκκλεάθοντα φυλαξεῖς.
Theocritus, Id. I. 63.

As sickly plants betray a niggard earth,
Whose barren bosom starves her generous birth,
Nor genial warmth, nor genial juice retains,
Their roots to feed, and fill their verdant veins :
And as in climes, where winter holds his reign, 5
The soil, though fertile, will not teem in vain,
Forbids her gems to swell, her shades to rise,
Nor trusts her blossoms to the churlish skies :

* In a note to his Roman History, Gibbon says : “ Instead of compiling tables of chronology and natural history, why did not Mr. Gray apply the powers of his genius to finish the philosophic poem of which he has left such an exquisite specimen ? ” Vol. iii. p. 248. 4to.—Would it not have been more philosophical in Gibbon to have lamented the situation in which Gray was placed ; which was not only not favourable to the cultivation of poetry, but which naturally directed his thoughts to those learned inquiries, that formed the amusement or business of all around him ?

So draw mankind in vain the vital airs,
 Uniform'd, unfriended, by those kindly cares, 10
 That health and vigour to the soul impart, [heart :
 Spread the young thought, and warm the opening
 So fond instruction on the growing powers
 Of nature idly lavishes her stores,
 If equal justice with unclouded face 15
 Smile not indulgent on the rising race,
 And scatter with a free, though frugal hand,
 Light golden showers of plenty o'er the land :
 But tyranny has fix'd her empire there,
 To check their tender hopes with chilling fear, 20
 And blast the blooming promise of the year.

 From where the rolling orb, that gives the day,
 His sable sons with nearer course surrounds

Malone, vol. iii. p. 522.

COMMENTARY.

THE author's subject being (as we have seen) The necessary alliance between a good form of government and a good mode of education, in order to produce the happiness of mankind, the Poem opens with two similes; an uncommon kind of exordium: but which I suppose the poet intentionally chose, to intimate the analogical method he meant to pursue in his subsequent reasonings. 1st, He asserts that men without education are like sickly plants in a cold or barren soil, (line 1 to 5, and 8 to 12;) and, 2dly, he compares them, when unblest with a just and well-regulated government, to plants that will not blossom or bear fruit in an unkindly and inclement air (l. 5 to 9, and l. 13 to 22). Having thus laid down the two propositions he means to prove, he begins by examining into the characteristics which (taking a general view of mankind) all men have in common one with another (l. 22 to 39); they covet pleasure and avoid pain (l. 31); they feel gratitude for benefits (l. 34); they desire to avenge wrongs, which they effect either by force or cunning (l. 35); they are linked to each other by their common feelings, and participate in sorrow and in joy (l. 36, 37). If then all the human species agree in so many moral particulars, whence arises the diversity of national characters? This question the poet puts at line 38, and dilates upon to l. 64. Why, says he, have some nations shewn a propensity to commerce and industry; others to war and rapine; others to ease and pleasure? (l. 42 to 46). Why have the northern people overspread, in all ages, and prevailed over the southern? (l. 46 to 58). Why has Asia been, time out of mind, the seat of despotism, and Europe that of freedom? (l. 59 to 64). Are we from these instances to imagine men necessarily enslaved to the inconveniences of the climate where they were born? (l. 64 to 72). Or are we not rather to suppose there is a natural strength in the human mind, that is able to vanquish and break through them? (l. 72 to 84). It is confest, however, that men receive an early tincture from the situation they are placed in, and the climate which produces them (l. 84 to 88). Thus the inhabitants of the mountains, inured to labour and patience, are naturally trained to war (l. 88 to 96); while those of the plain are more open to any attack, and softened by ease and plenty (l. 96 to 99). Again, the Ægyptians, from the nature of their situation, might be the inventors of home navigation, from a necessity of keeping up an intercourse between their towns during the inundation of the Nile (l. 99 to ***). Those persons would naturally have the first turn to commerce, who inhabited a barren coast like the Tyrians, and were persecuted by some neighbouring tyrant; or were drove to take refuge on some shoals, like the Venetian and Hollander; their discovery of some rich island, in the infancy of the world, described. The Tartar hardened to war by his rigorous climate and pastoral life, and by his disputes for water and herbage in a country without land-marks, as also by skirmishes between his rival clans, was consequently fitted to conquer his rich southern neighbours, whom ease and luxury had enervated: yet this is no proof that liberty and valour may not exist in southern climes, since the Syrians and Carthaginians gave noble instances of both; and the Arabians carried their conquests as far as the Tartars. Rome also (for many centuries) repulsed those very nations, which, when she grew weak, at length demolished † her extensive empire.****

† The reader will perceive that the Commentary goes further than the text. The reason for which is, that the Editor found it so on the paper from which he formed that comment; and as the thoughts seemed to be those which Gray would have next graced with the harmony of his numbers, he held it best to give them in continuation. There are other maxims on different papers, all apparently relating to the same subject, which are too excellent to be lost; these therefore (as the place in which he meant to employ them cannot be ascertained) I shall subjoin to this note, under the title of detached Sentiments:

“Man is a creature not capable of cultivating his mind but in society, and in that only where he is not a slave to the necessities of life.

“Want is the mother of the inferior arts, but Ease that of the finer; as eloquence, policy, morality, poetry, sculpture, painting, architecture, which are the improvements of the former.

“The climate inclines some nations to contemplation and pleasure; others to hardship, action, and war; but not so as to incapacitate the former for courage and discipline, or the latter for civility, politeness, and works of genius.

“ It is the proper work of education and government united to redress the faults that arise from the soil and air.

“ The principal drift of education should be to make men think in the northern climates, and act in the southern.

“ The different steps and degrees of education may be compared to the artificer's operations upon marble ; it is one thing to dig it out of the quarry, and another to square it, to give it gloss and lustre, call forth every beautiful spot and vein, shape it into a column, or animate it into a statue.

“ To a native of free and happy governments his country is always dear ;

‘ He loves his old hereditary trees :’ (COWLEY)
while the subject of a tyrant has no country ; he is therefore selfish and base-minded ; he has no family, no posterity, no desire of fame ; or, if he has, of one that turns not on its proper object.

“ Any nation that wants public spirit, neglects education, ridicules the desire of fame, and even of virtue and reason, must be ill governed.

“ Commerce changes entirely the fate and genius of nations, by communicating arts and opinions, circulating money, and introducing the materials of luxury ; she first opens and polishes the mind, then corrupts and enervates both that and the body.

“ Those invasions of effeminate southern nations by the warlike northern people, seem (in spite of all the terror, mischief, and ignorance which they brought with them) to be necessary evils ; in order to revive the spirit of mankind, softened and broken by the arts of commerce, to restore them to their native liberty and equality, and to give them again the power of supporting danger and hardship ; so a comet, with all the horrors that attend it as it passes through our system, brings a supply of warmth and light to the sun, and of moisture to the air.

“ The doctrine of Epicurus is ever ruinous to society ; it had its rise when Greece was declining, and perhaps hastened its dissolution, as also that of Rome ; it is now propagated in France and in England, and seems likely to produce the same effect in both.

“ One principal characteristic of vice in the present age is the contempt of fame.

“ Many are the uses of good fame to a generous mind : it extends our existence and example into future ages ; continues and propagates virtue, which otherwise would be as short-lived as our frame ; and prevents the prevalence of vice in a generation more corrupt even than our own. It is impossible to conquer that natural desire we have of being remembered ; even criminal ambition and avarice, the most selfish of all passions, would wish to leave a name behind them."

Thus, with all the attention that a connoisseur in painting employs in collecting every slight outline as well as finished drawing which led to the completion of some capital picture, I have endeavoured to preserve every fragment of this great poetical design. It surely deserved this care, as it was one of the noblest which Mr. Gray ever attempted ; and also, as far as he carried it into execution, the most exquisitely finished. That he carried it no further is, and must ever be, a most sensible loss to the republic of letters. Mason.

STANZAS TO MR. BENTLEY.

A FRAGMENT.

[See Mason's Memoirs, vol. iii. p. 148.]

These were in compliment to Bentley, who drew a set of designs for Gray's poems, particularly a head-piece to the Long Story. The original drawings are in the library at Strawberry Hill. See H. Walpole's Works, vol. ii. p. 447.

IN silent gaze the tuneful choir among,
 Half pleas'd, half blushing, let the Muse admire,
 While Bentley leads her sister-art along,
 And bids the pencil answer to the lyre.

V. 3. So Pope. Epist. to Jervas, 13 :

“ Smit with the love of sister-arts we came ;

And met congenial, mingling flame with flame.”

V. Dryden to Kneller, “ Our arts are sisters,” “ Long time the sister-arts in iron sleep.”

See, in their course, each transitory thought 5
 Fix'd by his touch a lasting essence take;
 Each dream, in fancy's airy colouring wrought
 To local symmetry and life awake!

The tardy rhymes that us'd to linger on,
 To censure cold, and negligent of fame, 10
 In swifter measures animated run,
 And catch a lustre from his genuine flame.

Ah! could they catch his strength, his easy grace,
 His quick creation, his unerring line;
 The energy of Pope they might efface, 15
 And Dryden's harmony submit to mine.

But not to one in this benighted age
 Is that diviner inspiration giv'n,
 That burns in Shakespeare's or in Milton's page,
 The pomp and prodigality of heav'n. 20

SKETCH OF HIS OWN CHARACTER.

WRITTEN IN 1761, AND FOUND IN ONE OF HIS POCKET-BOOKS.

Too poor for a bribe, and too proud to importune ;
He had not the method of making a fortune :
Could love, and could hate, so was thought somewhat odd ;

which he has added to supply the imperfect lines : my own opinion is, that Gray had in his mind Dryden's Epistle to Kneller, from which he partly took his expressions : under the shelter of that supposition, I shall venture to give another reading :

Enough for me, if to some feeling breast
My lines a secret sympathy 'convey ;'
And as their pleasing influence 'is exprest,'
A sigh of soft reflection 'dies away.'

V. 1. This is similar to a passage in one of Swift's letters to Gay, speaking of poets : " I have been considering why poets have such ill success in making their court. They are too libertine to haunt ante-chambers, too poor to bribe porters, and too proud to cringe to second-hand favourites in a great family." See Pope. Works, xi. 36. ed. Warton.

No very great wit, he believed in a God :
 A post or a pension he did not desire, 5
 But left church and state to Charles Townshend and Squire.

AMATORY LINES.

The following Lines by Gray first appeared in Warton's* edition of Pope, vol. i. p. 285.

WITH beauty, with pleasure surrounded, to languish—
 To weep without knowing the cause of my anguish :
 To start from short slumbers, and wish for the morning—
 To close my dull eyes when I see it returning ;

V. 4. "I pay my debts, believe, and say my prayers."
 Pope. Prol. to Satires, ver. 268.

V. 6. Squire] At that time Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, and afterwards Bishop of St. David's. Dr. S. Squire died 1766, see Nicholl. Poems, vol. vii. p. 231. Bishop Warburton one day met Dean Tucker, who said that he hoped his Lordship liked his situation at Gloucester, on which the sarcastic Bishop replied, that never bishoprick was so bedeanned, for that his predecessor Dr. Squire had made religion his trade, and that he Dr. Tucker had made trade his religion. See Cradock. Mem. iv. 335.

Perhaps these lines of Gray gave a hint to Goldsmith for his Character of Burke in the 'Retaliation :'

'Tho' equal to all things, for all things unfit,
 Too nice for a statesman, too proud for a wit ;
 For a patriot too cool, for a drudge, disobedient,
 And too fond of the right, to pursue the expedient.'

* As Dr. Warton has here favoured us with some manuscript lines by Gray, it will be a species of poetical justice

Ah ! what means yon violet flower !
 And the bud that decks the thorn !
 'Twas the lark that upward sprung ! 5
 'Twas the nightingale that sung !

Idle notes ! untimely green !
 Why this unavailing haste ?
 Western gales and skies serene
 Speak not always winter past. 10
 Cease, my doubts, my fears to move,
 Spare the honour of my love.

V. 9. Western, &c.] In Mr. Park's edition, these lines are printed thus :

"Gentle gales and sky serene Prove not always winter past."

Geminiani:—the thought from the French. This and the preceding Poem were presented by Miss Speed, then Countess de Viry, to the Rev. Mr. Leman, of Suffolk, while on a visit at her castle in Savoy, where she died in 1783. Admiral Sir T. Duckworth, whose father was vicar of Stoke from 1756 to 1794, remembers Gray and Miss Speed at that place. Gray left Stoke about the year 1758, on the death of his aunt Mrs. Rogers: when his acquaintance with Miss Speed probably closed.

* The Rev. Henry Etough, of Cambridge University, the person satirized, was as remarkable for the eccentricities of his character, as for his personal appearance. Mr. Tyson, of Bene't College, made an etching of his head, and presented it to Gray, who embellished it with the above lines. Information respecting Mr. Etough, (who was rector of Therfield, Herts, and of Colmworth, Bedfordshire, and patronized by Sir Robert Walpole,) may be found in the Gentleman's Magaz. vol. lvi. p. 25. 281; and in Nichols's Literary Anecdotes of the xviiiith Century, vol. viii. p. 261, and Brydges' Restituta, vol. iv. p. 246, and Polwhele's Recollect. i. 212. "Etough was originally a Jew, but renounced his religion for the sake of a valuable living. To understand the second line, it is necessary to inform you, that Tophet kept the conscience of the minister." See Neville. Imit. of Horace, p. 59. "The slanderous pests, the ETOUGHS of the age." See an account of Dr. Etough in Coxe's Life of Sir R. Walpole, vol. i. p. xxvi. "Etough was a man of great research and eager curiosity, replete with prejudice, but idolizing Sir R. Walpole, &c."

IMPROMPTU,

SUGGESTED BY A VIEW, IN 1766, OF THE SEAT AND RUINS OF A DECEASED NOBLEMAN, AT KINGSGATE, KENT.*

Written at Denton in the spring of 1766. See Nichols' Select Poems, vol. vii. p. 350, and W. S. Landori Poemata, p. 196.]

OLD, and abandon'd by each venal friend,
 Here H——d form'd the pious resolution
 To smuggle a few years, and strive to mend
 A broken character and constitution. 4

On this congenial spot he fix'd his choice;
 Earl Goodwin trembled for his neighbouring sand;
 Here sea-gulls scream, and cormorants rejoice,
 And mariners, though shipwreck'd, dread to land.

Here reign the blustering North and blighting East,
 No tree is heard to whisper, bird to sing; 10

* Dallaway, in his Anecdotes of the Arts, p. 385, says, that this house was built by Lord Holland as a correct imitation of Cicero's Formian villa, at Baiæ, under the superintendance of Sir Thomas Wynne, Bart. afterwards Lord Newborough. See Gent. Mag vol. lxxvii. p. 1116.

Yet Nature could not furnish out the feast,
 Art he invokes new horrors still to bring.

Here mouldering fanes and battlements arise,
 Turrets and arches nodding to their fall,
 Unpeopled monast'ries delude our eyes, 15
 And mimic desolation covers all.

“ Ah!” said the sighing peer, “ had B—te been true,
 Nor M—'s, R—'s, B—'s friendship vain,
 Far better scenes than these had blest our view,
 And realiz'd the beauties which we feign: 20”

“ Purg'd by the sword, and purified by fire,
 Then had we seen proud London's hated walls ;
 Owls would have hooted in St. Peter's choir,
 And foxes stunk and litter'd in St. Paul's.”

I have seen "A letter of advice from Alma Mater to her beloved son, Jemmy Twitcher, 1764."]

WHEN sly Jemmy Twitcher had smugg'd up his face,

With a lick of court white-wash, and pious grimace,
A wooing he went, where three sisters of old
In harmless society guttle and scold. 4

"Lord! sister," says Physic to Law, "I declare,
Such a sheep-biting look, such a pick-pocket air!
Not I for the Indies:—You know I'm no prude,—
But his nose is a shame,—and his eyes are so lewd!

Thy serpent's tooth admitted of no lure :
Shelburne and Calcraft! O! the holy band
See, see, with Gower caballing where they stand," &c.

* These verses were written a short time previous to the election of a high-steward of the University of Cambridge, for which office the noble lord alluded to (Lord Sandwich) made an active canvass.

V. 8. Nose] In all editions printed by mistake "Name."

Then he shambles and straddles so oddly—I fear—
No—at our time of life 'twould be silly, my dear."

"I don't know," says Law, "but methinks for his look, 11

'Tis just like the picture in Rochester's book;
Then his character, Phyzzy,—his morals—his life—

When she died, I can't tell, but he once had a wife.
They say he's no Christian, loves drinking and w——g, 15

And all the town rings of his swearing and roaring!
His lying and filching, and Newgate-bird tricks;—
Not I—for a coronet, chariot and six."

Divinity heard, between waking and dozing,
Her sisters denying, and Jemmy proposing: 20
From table she rose, and with bumper in hand,
She strok'd up her belly, and strok'd down her band—

"What a pother is here about wenching and roaring!
Why, David lov'd catches, and Solomon w——g:
Did not Israel filch from th' Egyptians of old 25
Their jewels of silver and jewels of gold?
The prophet of Bethel, we read, told a lie:
He drinks—so did Noah;—he swears—so do I:

V. 9. ——"That babe of grace
Who ne'er before at sermon show'd his face,
See Jemmy Twitcher shambles."——

Heroic Epistle, 125, note.

See Hurd. Obs. on this word, in Cradock. Memoirs, vol. 1.
117; and Anecdote, p. 164.

V. 16. But see Cradock. Memoirs, vol. iv. 166.

To reject him for such peccadillos, were odd ;
 Besides, he repents—for he talks about G**—

[To Jemmy]

‘ Never hang down your head, you poor penitent elf, Come buss me—I’ll be Mrs. Twitcher myself.’”

[The concluding couplet is too gross to give. ED.]

“ From recollection I am sure Lord Sandwich was aware of Gray, for about the time he offered himself as high steward, contrary to his usual maxim of not seeing an enemy on public occasions, he once said to me, “ I have my private reasons for knowing his absolute inveteracy.” Cradock. iv. 223.

EXTRACTS.

PROPERTIUS, LIB. III. ELEG. V. v. 19.

“ Me juvat in primâ coluisse Heliconâ juventâ,” &c.

IMITATED.

LONG as of youth the joyous hours remain,
 Me may Castalia’s sweet recess detain,
 Fast by the umbrageous vale lull’d to repose,
 Where Aganippe warbles as it flows ;
 Or roused by sprightly sounds from out the trance,
 I’d in the ring knit hands, and join the Muses’ dance.
 Give me to send the laughing bowl around,
 My soul in Bacchus’ pleasing fetters bound ;
 Let on this head unfading flowers reside,
 There bloom the vernal rose’s earliest pride ;      10

And when, our flames commission'd to destroy,
 Age step 'twixt Love and me, and intercept the joy;
 When my changed head these locks no more shall
 And all its jetty honours turn to snow; [know,
 Then let me rightly spell of Nature's ways; 15
 To Providence, to HIM my thoughts I'd raise,
 Who taught this vast machine its steadfast laws,
 That first, eternal, universal cause;
 Search to what regions yonder star retires,
 That monthly waning hides her paly fires, 20
 And whence, anew revived, with silver light
 Relumes her crescent orb to cheer the dreary night:
 How rising winds the face of ocean sweep,
 Where lie the eternal fountains of the deep,
 And whence the cloudy magazines maintain 25
 Their wintry war, or pour the autumnal rain;
 How flames perhaps, with dire confusion hurl'd,
 Shall sink this beauteous fabrick of the world;
 What colours paint the vivid arch of Jove;
 What wondrous force the solid earth can move,
 When Pindus' self approaching ruin dreads,
 Shakes all his pines, and bows his hundred heads;
 Why does yon orb, so exquisitely bright,
 Obscure his radiance in a short-liv'd night;
 Whence the Seven-Sisters' congregated fires, 33
 And what Bootes' lazy waggon tires;
 How the rude surge its sandy bounds control;
 Who measured out the year, and bade the seasons
 roll;
 If realms beneath those fabled torments know,
 Pangs without respite, fires that ever glow, 40

Earth's monster brood stretch'd on their iron bed,
 The hissing terrors round Alecto's head,
 Scarce to nine acres Tityus' bulk confined,
 The triple dog that scares the shadowy kind,
 All angry heaven inflicts, or hell can feel, 45
 The pendent rock, Ixion's whirling wheel,
 Famine at feasts, or thirst amid the stream;
 Or are our fears the enthusiast's empty dream,
 And all the scenes, that hurt the grave's repose,
 But pictured horror and poetic woes. 50

These soft inglorious joys my hours engage;
 Be love my youth's pursuit, and science crown my age.

* 1738. Æt. 22.

PROPERTIUS, LIB. II. ELEG. I. v. 17.

“Quod mihi si tantum, Mæcenas, fata dedissent,” &c.

YET would the tyrant Love permit me raise
 My feeble voice, to sound the victor's praise,
 To paint the hero's toil, the ranks of war,
 The laurell'd triumph and the sculptured car;
 No giant race, no tumult of the skies, 5
 No mountain-structures in my verse should rise,
 Nor tale of Thebes, nor Ilium there should be,
 Nor how the Persian trod the indignant sea;
 Not Marius' Cimbrian wreaths would I relate,
 Nor lofty Carthage struggling with her fate. 10
 Here should Augustus great in arms appear,

And thou Mecænas, be my second care ;
 Here Mutina from flames and famine free,
 And there the ensanguined wave of Sicily,
 And scepter'd Alexandria's captive shore, 15
 And sad Philippi, red with Roman gore :
 Then, while the vaulted skies loud ïos rend,
 In golden chains should loaded monarchs bend,
 And hoary Nile with pensive aspect seem
 To mourn the glories of his sevenfold stream, 20
 While prows, that late in fierce encounter met,
 Move through the sacred way and vainly threat,
 Thee too the Muse should consecrate to fame,
 And with her garlands weave thy ever-faithful name.

But nor Callimachus' enervate strain 25
 May tell of Jove, and Phlegra's blasted plain ;
 Nor I with unaccustomed vigour trace
 Back to its source divine the Julian race.
 Sailors to tell of winds and seas delight,
 The shepherd of his flocks, the soldier of the fight,
 A milder warfare I in verse display ;
 Each in his proper art should waste the day :
 Nor thou my gentle calling disapprove,
 To die is glorious in the bed of Love.

Happy the youth, and not unknown to fame, 35
 Whose heart has never felt a second flame.
 Oh, might that envied happiness be mine !
 To Cynthia all my wishes I confine ;
 Or if, alas ! it be my fate to try
 Another love, the quicker let me die : 40
 But she, the mistress of my faithful breast,
 Has oft the charms of constancy confest,

Condemns her fickle sex's fond mistake,
 And hates the tale of Troy for Helen's sake.
 Me from myself the soft enchantress stole ;      45
 Ah ! let her ever my desires control,
 Or if I fall the victim of her scorn,
 From her loved door may my pale corse be borne.
 The power of herbs can other harms remove,
 And find a cure for every ill, but love.      50
 The Lemnian's hurt Machaon could repair,
 Heal the slow chief, and send again to war ;
 To Chiron Phœnix owed his long-lost sight,
 And Phœbus' son recall'd Androgeon to the light.
 Here arts are vain, e'en magic here must fail,      55
 The powerful mixture and the midnight spell ;
 The hand that can my captive heart release,
 And to this bosom give its wonted peace,
 May the long thirst of Tantalus allay,
 Or drive the infernal vulture from his prey.      60
 For ills unseen what remedy is found ?
 Or who can probe the undiscover'd wound ?
 The bed avails not, nor the leech's care,
 Nor changing skies can hurt, nor sultry air.
 'Tis hard th' elusive symptoms to explore :      65
 To-day the lover walks, to-morrow is no more ;
 A train of mourning friends attend his pall,
 And wonder at the sudden funeral.      [claim,
     When then the fates that breath they gave shall
 And the short marble but preserve a name,      70
 A little verse my ðll that shall remain ;
 Thy passing courser's slacken'd speed restrain ;
 (Thou envied honour of thy poet's days,

Of all our youth the ambition and the praise !)
 Then to my quiet urn awhile draw near, 75
 And say, while o'er that place you drop the tear,
 Love and the fair were of his youth the pride ;
 He lived, while she was kind ; and when she frown'd, he died.

April, 1742. Æt. 26.

TASSO GERUS. LIB. CANT. XIV. ST. 32.

“ Preser commiato, e sî 'l desio gli sprona,” &c.

DISMISS'D at length, they break through all delay
 To tempt the dangers of the doubtful way ;
 And first to Ascalon their steps they bend,
 Whose walls along the neighbouring sea extend,
 Nor yet in prospect rose the distant shore ; 5
 Scarce the hoarse waves from far were heard to roar,
 When thwart the road a river roll'd its flood Tempestuous, and all further course withstood ;
 The torrent stream his ancient bounds disdains,
 Swoll'n with new force, and late-descending rains.
 Irresolute they stand ; when lo, appears
 The wondrous Sage : vigorous he seem'd in years,
 Awful his mien, low as his feet there flows
 A vestment unadorn'd, though white as new-fall'n snows ;
 Against the stream the waves secure he trod, 15
 His head a chaplet bore, his hand a rod.
 As on the Rhine, when Boreas' fury reigns,

And winter binds the floods in icy chains,
Swift shoots the village-maid in rustic play
Smooth, without step, adown the shining way, 20
Fearless in long excursion loves to glide,
And sports and wantons o'er the frozen tide.

So mov'd the Seer, but on no harden'd plain ;
The river boil'd beneath, and rush'd toward the main.

Where fix'd in wonder stood the warlike pair, 25
His course he turn'd, and thus relieved their care :

“ Vast, oh my friends, and difficult the toil
To seek your hero in a distant soil !
No common helps, no common guide ye need,
Art it requires, and more than winged speed. 30
What length of sea remains, what various lands,
Oceans unknown, inhospitable sands !
For adverse fate the captive chief has hurl'd
Beyond the confines of our narrow world :
Great things and full of wonder in your ears 35
I shall unfold ; but first dismiss your fears ;
Nor doubt with me to tread the downward road
That to the grotto leads, my dark abode.”

Scarce had he said, before the warriors' eyes
When mountain-high the waves disparted rise ; 40
The flood on either hand its billows rears,
And in the midst a spacious arch appears.
Their hands he seized, and down the steep he led Beneath the obedient river's inmost bed ;
The watery glimmerings of a fainter day 45
Discover'd half, and half conceal'd their way ;
As when athwart the dusky woods by night

The uncertain crescent gleams a sickly light
Through subterraneous passages they went,
Earth's inmost cells, and caves of deep descent ; 50
Of many a flood they view'd the secret source,
The birth of rivers rising to their course,
Whate'er with copious train its channel fills,
Floats into lakes, and bubbles into rills ;
The Po was there to see, Danubius' bed, 55
Euphrates' fount, and Nile's mysterious head.
Further they pass, where ripening minerals flow,
And embryon metals undigested glow,
Sulphureous veins and living silver shine,
Which soon the parent sun's warm powers refine,
In one rich mass unite the precious store,
The parts combine and harden into ore :
Here gems break through the night with glittering beam,
And paint the margin of the costly stream,
All stones of lustre shoot their vivid ray, 65
And mix attemper'd in a various day ;
Here the soft emerald smiles of verdant hue,
And rubies flame, with sapphire's heavenly blue,
The diamond there attracts the wondrous sight,
Proud of its thousand dies and luxury of light.

V. 24. This line is from Virgil, Æn. ii. 773 :

V. 29. “ Ingrediturque solo, et caput inter nubila condit,”

Virg. Æn. iv. 177.

V. 31. " Et crebris legimus freta consita terris,"

Virg. Æn. iii. 127.

V. 35. There is no authority in Latin poetry for the use of the word " imbibit" in this sense. It is a word unusual in poetry, though twice found in Lucretius (iii. 1010, and vi. 71): but it is there used in another construction: as " Imbibit petere," i. e. " Induxit in animum petere." There is a note on this word in Mureti Var. Lectiones, lib. i. cap. 6. (In Gesner's Thesaurus, and Havercamp's Lucretius, the reference to Muretus is wrong, 1. cap. 5.) The word which Gray should have used, is " bibit." See Æn. i. 749: xi. 804: Georg. ii. 506. &c. " Lympha bibit solem." Sid. Apoll. xi. 12. See the notes of the commentators, on Gratii Cynege. 60. Burm. Poet. Lat. Minor. vol. i. p. 60.

V. 38. This word is unusual in Latin poetry. It may be defended on the authority of Lucretius, iv. 247: " Ex-templo protrudit, agitque aëra:"—where, however, some manuscripts read " procudit."

V. 39. " ——— Natura videtur

V. 75. So Virgil, Georg. i. 424 : " Lunasque sequentes."

V. 75. This expression " Penuria Phœbi" is not, I believe, warranted by the authority of any of the Latin poets. There would have been less objection, if the plain term, instead of the figurative, had been used.

SAPPHIC ODE: TO MR. WEST.*

V. 6. There is no authority for the last syllable of "temere" being made long. See Burmanni. Anth. Lat. vol. ii. 458, and Class. Journal, No. xviii. p. 340. Yet Casimir Sarmievus has erred in the quantity of this word, as well as Gray:

In Horace, Virgil, and Ovid the final syllable of this word is always elided.—A friend observed, that the last syllable of temere is made long in the ' Gradus' on the authority of Tertullian : " Immemor ille Dei temerè committere temere." It is hardly necessary to observe that the authority of Tertullian on a question of a doubtful quantity would not be esteemed sufficient. The last syllable of temere being always elided by Virgil, Horace, and Ovid, sufficiently shows their opinion to have been, that it was short ; and therefore that it could not be used in Hexameter verse, without lengthening its final syllable by elision. See Menagiana, vol. iii. p. 418. (Hor. Od. ii. xi. 13, " Pinu jacentes sic temere." Luke.)

V. 45. The last syllable of ego is short, and so used by the best writers; nor will the example of Ausonius, or an instance or two of its being found long in Plautus and Catullus, authorize a modern poet in this license. See the note by Heinsius on Ovid. Ep. xiii. 135, vol. i. p. 180, and Burmann on Propertii Eleg. I. viii. 41. "Recte Heinsius, qui nunquam a Nasone, p. 93, 94, 733, hujus voculæ ultimam produci notat; et falsos esse illos qui ab ullo Augustei ævi poetâ id factum contendunt, dicit ad Albinov. Epiced. ---

† So in the Sapphic Ode, "Mollior æstas." Ovid in his Epist. ex Ponto, i. ii. 62: "Litora mollia."

V. 1. I do not know on what authority Gray has used the word "Trebie" with the final e. The word which is used in the Classic authors is Trebia, Τρεβία. See Sil. Ital. iv. 661, xi. 140, &c. sæpe. Lucan, ii. 46. Livy, xxi. c. 48. Pliny, N. H. 3. 20, &c. Claudian, xxiv. 145. Manilius, iv. 661.—It is most probable that Gray thought that the final syllable of Trebia could not be lengthened; therefore used the word Trebie, as Libya, Libye. But in

Et suspirantes ducere mœstus aquas ;
 Maurorumque ala, et nigræ increbescere turmæ,
 Et pulsa Ausonidum ripa sonare fugâ.

CARMEN AD C. FAVONIUM ZEPHYRINUM.*

[See Mason's Memoirs, vol. ii. p. 120.]

MATER rosarum, cui teneræ vigent
 Auræ Favonî, cui Venus it comes

Ovid the words, Leda, Rhea, Hybla, Phædra, Andromeda, Amalthea, &c. lengthen the final syllable. "Mittit Hypermnestrâ de tot modo fratribus uni," Ov. Ep. xiv. 1. In Propertius, ii. xi. 5. the a in Electra is long ; also in Ovid. Fast. iv. 177. See on this point D'Orville. Misc. Obs. ii. 202, and Burmann. notes to Anthol. Latin. i. 215. ii. 78. Jortin. Tracts. vol. ii. 421. Burmann. Propert. iv. 7. 63. p. 844. In the Herc. Fur. of Seneca, 203 : "Megarâ parvum comitata gregem." Gray therefore would have had sufficient authority for the use of Trebia in this place. So Sil. Italicus, iv. 661, describing the appearance of Trebia :
 "Tum madidos crines, et glauca † fronde revinctum Attollit cum voce caput."

Virg. Georg. iv. 182 : "Et glaucas salices." Luke.

V. 5. Sil. Ital. describes the army of Hannibal, iii. 407.

"Talia Sidonius per campos agmina ductor Pulvere nigrantes raptat."

* Written by Gray immediately after his journey to Frascati and the cascades of Tivoli, which he had described in a preceding letter to his friend West.

V. 1. "Et reserata viget genitalis aura Favonî," Lucret. i. 2.

† When the epithet glauca is applied to the foliage of a tree, and the tree itself not particularized, as in the passage of Sil. Italicus ; we must refer it to the "salix," the "populus," or the "oliva ;" according to situation, and other circumstances ; as "Cæruleus" is generally applied to the Pine, Fir, and Cypress.

- V. 20. In Mason's, and all the subsequent editions, the word " Naiasin," is here placed; which would make the line unmetrical. Gray indeed might have written " Naiasin geminâsse rupes." But the word " Naides" in the following line, which has also the same error in the editions as the former word, would make an objection to that reading. I have therefore restored the metre, by reading " Naisin" and " Naides." See Gronovius on Senecæ Hippol. 778. Jor-

V. 31, 32. There is no instance in Horace of a broken word ending the third line of the Alcaic stanza, or, indeed, of its being used at all; and therefore it must be considered, as not defended by authority; though it may be found ending the third line of the Sapphic stanza, in Horace, i. xxv. 11, i. ii. 19, ii. xvi. 7, iii. xxvii. 60, but, I believe, that no example even of this can be found in the Sapphics of Seneca. It ends the first line, in Hor. Od. iv. ii. 1, and the second line in ii. ii. 18, and iv. ii. 22, in which latter passage it is to be observed, that the "divisio vocis" takes place in two successive lines.

V. 25. In the modern Latin poetry, this license of lengthening the " que," before the mute and liquid, even with the power of the cæsura, ought to be avoided, as it is supported by so few examples. See Virg. Æn. vii. 186. Georg. i.

* In Heron's [Pinkerton] " Letters of Literature," p. 299, is a translation of this ode ; and after that, a most extraordinary assertion, which I wish the author of that book had not given me an opportunity of producing : as, to say no worse, it is erroneous in every instance. " This exquisite ode," says he, " is by no means in the Alcaic measure, which Mr. Gray seems to have intended it for. The Alcaic measure, as used by Horace, consists of six feet, or twelve syllables, in the two first lines ; three feet and a half, or seven syllables, in the third ; and four feet, or eight syllables, in the fourth. ' Truly, Master Holofernes, the epithets are sweetly varied, like a scholar at the least,' " (Love's Labour's Lost). And yet I am afraid that this ingenious commentator has not experienced how true is the admonition given by the Moorish grammarian :

“ Quid sit litera, quid duæ,
 Junctæ quid sibi syllabæ.
 Dumos inter, et aspera
 Scruposis sequimur vadis.

V. 7. In Mason's edition it is spelt 'Massinissa;' which, however, will only partially correct the quantity; as the second syllable will still be short. See Ovid. Fast. vi. 769: "Postera lux melior, superat Masinissa Syphacem." And Sil. Ital. xvi. 117:

"Cultuque Aeneadum nomen Masinissa superbum."

That 'Masinissa' is the right orthography, see Drakenborch's note on Sil. Italicus; Gronovius on Livy, lib. xxv. c. xxxiv. 11; Vorstius on Val. Max. i. i. 31. Tortellius, in his Grammatical Commentaries, under the word 'Masinissa,' says, 'Non enim primum aliquo pacto duplicari potuit: ut ignari quidam syllabarum voluerunt.' † Ellis, in his Historical Sketch of English Poetry, (p. 224,) thinks that the description of the entry of Troilus into Troy, in Chaucer's romance of Troilus and Creseida, suggested to Gray some very beautiful lines in this Epistle : " Jam flexi, regale decus," &c. (See Chaucer, b. xi. st. 83. fol. 151. ed. 1602.)

“ Lasso ch' i' ardo, ed altri non mel crede ;” &c.

IMITATED.*

UROR, io ; veros at nemo credidet ignes :
 Quin credunt omnes ; dura sed illa negat,
 Illa negat, soli volumus cui posse probare ;
 Quin videt, et visos improba dissimulat. 4
 Ah, durissima mî, sed et, ah, pulcherrima rerum !
 Nonne animam in miserâ, Cynthia, fronte vides ?
 Omnibus illa pia est ; et, si non fata vetâssent,
 Tam longas mentem flecteret ad lacrymas.
 Sed tamen has lacrymas, hunc tu, quem spreveris,
 ignem,
 Carminaque auctori non bene culta suo, 10
 Turba futurorum non ignorabit amantûm :
 Nos duo, cumque erimus parvus uterque cinis,
 Jamque faces, eheu ! oculorum, et frigida lingua,
 Hæ sine luce jacent, immemor illa loqui ;
 Infelix musa æternos spirabit amores, 15
 Ardebitque urnâ multa favilla meâ.

* Great judgment is evinced in the imitation of this sonnet in elegiac Propertian verse, and the substitution of the name of Cynthia, for the Laura of Petrarch, gives it an air of originality in the Latin language, and marks that propriety which distinguishes every composition of Mr. Gray.

MR. GRAY paid very particular attention to the Anthologia Græca, and he enriched an interleaved edition of it (by Henry Stephens in 1566) with copious notes, with parallel passages from various authors, and with some conjectural emendations of the text. He translated, or imitated, a few of the epigrams, and as the editor thinks that the reader may not be displeased with the terse, elegant, and animated manner in which Mr. Gray transfused their spirit into the Latin language, he is presented with a specimen.

IN FONTEM AQUÆ CALIDÆ.<sup>7</sup>

SUB platanis puer Idalius prope fluminis undam
 Dormiit, in ripâ deposuitque facem.
 Tempus adest, sociæ, Nympharum audentior una,
 Tempus adest, ultra quid dubitamus ? ait.
 Ilicet incurrit, pestem ut divûmque hominumque
 Lampada collectis exanimaret aquis :
 Demens ! nam nequiiit sævam restinguere flammam
 Nympha, sed ipsa ignes traxit, et inde calet.

<sup>9</sup> IRREPSISSE suas murem videt Argus in ædes,
 Atque ait, heus, a me nunquid, amice, velis ?
 Ille autem ridens, metuas nihil, inquit ; apud te,
 O bone, non epulas, hospitium petimus.

<sup>10</sup> HANC tibi Rufinus mittit, Rodoclea, coronam,
 Has tibi decerpens texerat ipse rosas ;
 Est viola, est anemòne, est suave-rubens hyacyn-Mistaque Narcisso lutea caltha suo : [thus,
 Sume ; sed aspiciens, ah, fidere desine formæ ;
 Qui pinxit, brevis est, sartaque teque, color.

AD AMOREM.<sup>11</sup>

PAULISPER vigiles, oro, compesce dolores,
 Respue nec musæ supplicis aure preces ;
 Oro brevem lacrymis veniam, requiemque furori :
 Ah, ego non possum vulnera tanta pati !
 Intima flamma, vides, miseros depascitur artus,
 Surgit et extremis spiritus in labiis :
 Quòd si tam tenuem cordi est exsolvere vitam,
 Stabit in opprobrium sculpta querela tuum.
 Juro perque faces istas, arcumque sonantem,
 Spiculaque hoc unum figere docta jecur ;
 Heu fuge crudelem puerum, sævasque sagittas !
 Huic fuit exitii causa, viator, Amor.
